The tonnage tax works badly for our vessels as compared with provincial vessels. Province vessels have a limited coast range of their own, and generally make a business of plying between their ports and those of the States. They pay the tonnage tax for the year, and can distribute it over the dozen or more voyages they make during the season. But one of our vessels, having the offer of a provincial freight, is obliged to pay the whole tax for the single freight she is offered; for this reason is at disadvantage with the provincial competitor. Freighting is such close business that customs charges make an important item in the calculation.

Now that the necessities of the general treasury, which caused the imposition of this new taxation, have been happily relieved, I trust that Congress will return to the old charges before the war. Sailing vessels then did not suffer so much as now from the competition of steam vessels, and not at all from the competition of railroads.

The hospital tax, which is $4.80 annually to the sailor, should be removed altogether. The sailor in one of our coasting vessels pays taxes at home like other citizens, and when sick he gets well when and as he can. I annex a statement as to the benefit the sailor receives from hospitals by Mr. Nutt, who for the last twenty years has served most efficiently as deputy collector and collector of the port of Passamaquoddy, and knows what he writes about.

I also commend Mr. Nutt's statement of the fees and charges levied formerly and now.

Much has been said about the decadence of our shipping, and many propositions have been made for its restoration. Bounties and postal compensation have been proposed; but, in the nature of things, nothing of this kind can be done for coasters.

It is true these vessels are of small tonnage, running ordinarily from fifty tons to two hundred, but there are large numbers of them; and any one looking into the statistics of tonnage will see that a large proportion of United States tonnage is enrolled and licensed, or what we call coasting tonnage.

Our ships engaged in foreign trade, whether sail or steam vessels, are navigated almost wholly by foreign sailors, while our coasters and fishing vessels are very largely sailed by our own citizens, and while it may with truth be said that the increase of our deep-sea tonnage will have little effect on coasting it will surely be found that the increase of our coasting tonnage will greatly benefit our large shipping.

I respectfully submit the annexed bill, and hope for favorable action.

F. A. PIKE.

CALAIS, MAINE, March 4, 1882.

I inclose letters from Mr. Nutt and Mr. Grove referred to, and also from Mr. Webber, deputy collector at Saint Stephen, and from Mr. Boardman, a vessel-owner, and the blanks ordinarily used by customs officers, with specification of charges.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, EASTPORT, MAINE,
Collector's Office, Febrdary 27, 1882.

MY DEAR MR. PIKE:

The charge for papering a new vessel would be as follows:

For enrollment, $1.10; for license 70 cents, if under 100 tons, and $1.20 if over 100 tons. If a register were required it would cost $2.25. The fee for measuring a new vessel is $1.50 for each section. A vessel of 50 feet keel or under is divided into six sections; one over 50 and not over 100, eight sections; over 100 and not over 150, ten sections; above 150, and not over 200, twelve sections; above 200, and not over 250, fourteen sections; over 250, sixteen sections.

The old fee for measuring was—

If 5 tons and less than 20	$0 50
If 20 tons and not over 70	75
If 70 tons and not over 100	1 00
Over 100 tons	1 50
For enrollment	50
For license—not over 20 tons	25
Over 20 and not over 100	50
Over 100	1 00

Registry fees were same as now.

The tonnage tax was a war measure, as you say, of 30 cents per ton.

Hospital money was formerly 20 cents per month; now it is 40 cents.

It is too much to try for, but there is no sense in the hospital tax. The true way is to treat seamen as men, collect nothing from them, and make no hospital provision for them. The great portion of the fund is used up in maintaining costly buildings and large salaries, and like everything else the Marine Hospital Department is steadily laboring to enlarge its powers and the influence of its head. That and the Revenue Marine Service should be abolished. They are of no earthly use to the people.

I send you bill of charges for a plasterman. If the vessel should be American and employed in coasting the charge of register would be added, $2.25, and certified crew list and bond, 65 cents; certified shipping papers, 20 cents.

Yours, very truly,

N. B. NUTT.

CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Saint Andrews, February 25, 1882.

MY DEAR SIR: I have this day received your letter of 22d instant, and it affords me much pleasure to comply with your request. I am glad to know that at least a movement is about to be made to get the tonnage tax off vessels running between the Dominion and American (or, rather, United States) ports.

I here inclose official paper, which answers your first question; for measuring vessels—there is no charge for furnishing papers, or for registry of the same. Answer to second question: there is no charge for entering vessels. There is a charge of two cents per ton for "sick mariners" (that is, hospital dues.) Vessels under 100 tons pay this but once in a year, no matter how many times such vessel arrives and departs to or from any port in the Dominion; vessels over 100 tons pay three times in each year, (two cents per ton each time.) no matter how many times such vessel arrives and departs to or from any port in the Dominion. Those charges apply to all vessels alike, ours as well as foreign; if a vessel over 100 tons comes in the Dominion but once in the year she only pays two cents per ton to this fund, the second time that she arrives two cents per ton more is collected, and the third time two cents per ton more is collected. Under any circumstances, no more than six cents can be collected from any vessel over 100 tons, and no more than two cents from vessels under 100 tons.

Our customs act does not require a consular certificate when a vessel arrives from any of your ports, (Dominion or United States vessels.)

I know of none other customs charges than I have named.

Yours, truly,

C. M. GOVE, Collector.

Hon. F. A. PIKE, Baltimore.

CUSTOMS, ST. STEPHEN'S, N. B.,
February 25, 1882.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry as to the amount of dues or custom-house fees exacted from vessels arriving from ports in the United States or elsewhere in ports in the Dominion, I beg leave to inform you that the only dues or fees to which they are subject is two cents per ton, register tonnage. This is payable only once per year on vessels under 100 tons, and three times per year on all vessels over 100 tons register. These dues are called the sick mariners' fund, and go to the support of hospitals for sick seamen, and all vessels paying these dues, no matter what their nationality, are entitled to send their sick seamen to the hospital to be cared for.

As an example of the requirements under our laws I may give you that of the United States schooner L. A. Boardman, which entered here July 10, 1881; register 112 tons, two cents, $2.24. This was all the dues required except twenty-five cents for furnishing blanks; when these are furnished by the vessel no charge is made for blanks.

I am, sir, yours respectfully,

H. WEBBER.
Collector of Customs.

S. M. TODD, Esq., Calais. Maine.

CALAIS, February 24, 1882.

SIR: Inclosed find the papers you asked me to obtain, which, I think, will cover the whole, also collector of customs' certificate at St. Stephen's.

The vessel taken from our custom-house books is the schooner Louise A. Boardman, 112 tons, launched by us in 1872; and you will find the blanks inclosed, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, explained inside.

No. 1. Measurement, new vessel and first papers.
No. 2. Clearance for provinces to load.
No. 3. Bills paid on entry back from provinces.
No. 4. Change papers back to coasting license.

In addition to No. 3 there would be 67 cents additional, provided we had a surveyor of port here.

Should you want any other information I will gladly get it if in my power to do so.

Yours, respectfully,

GEO. H. BOARDMAN.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA,
Thursday, 26th day of March, 1874.

Present, his excellency the Governor-General in Council.

On the joint recommendation of the honorable the minister of marine and fisheries and the minister of customs, and under and in pursuance of the provisions of the twelfth section of the act passed in the thirty-sixth year of her majesty's reign, entitled "An act relating to shipping, and for the registration, inspection, and classification thereof," his excellency, by and with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, has been pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that surveyors of shipping shall be entitled to the following-mentioned fees for the measurement of vessels about to be registered for the first time under the act, or requiring measurement for the purposes of registry, that is to say:

For vessels under 100 tons register	$2
For vessels 100 tons, and not exceeding 200 tons	3
For vessels over 200 tons, and not exceeding 400 tons	4
For vessels over 400 tons, and not exceeding 1,000 tons	5
For vessels over 1,000 tons	6

His excellency, on the authority aforesaid, has further been pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that every surveyor of shipping shall, when required to travel for the purpose of making any such measurement, be entitled to demand and receive from the persons requiring his services such amount for traveling expenses as shall have been actually, necessarily, and bona fide expended by him for that purpose, such amount in no case, however, to exceed the rate of fifteen cents for every mile actually traveled by him.

W. A. HIMSWORTH,
Clerk Privy Council.

BINDING OF DOCUMENTS FOR REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask leave to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted by the House January 26, 1882, authorizing the Clerk of the House to cause to be bound at the Government Printing Office one copy of any public document desired by any Representative or Delegate for his personal use, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PAGE. I will not object to this resolution if it will not take time in debate.

Mr. ATKINS. It will cause no debate so far as I am concerned.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY TRIAL OF SERGEANT MASON.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas in a time of profound peace, when the authority of the civil tribunals is respected and enforced in every part of the land, one Mason, sergeant of Company B of the Second Artillery, has been tried and convicted by a military court for a crime against the municipal law, and sentenced to eight years' imprisonment: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of this House be instructed to inquire whether the convicting by said military court and the proceedings had thereunder are not in violation of the laws and of the Constitution of the United States, and report thereon to this House; and the said committee are authorized to send for persons and papers.

EDWARD O'BRIEN.

Mr. DAVIDSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5212) to place Edward O'Brien, an ordnance-sergeant in the United States Army, on the retired list; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask, by unanimous consent, to have printed in the RECORD the memorial of a convention held in my State in regard to railroad lands.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

Whereas a grant of lands, including every alternate section within ten miles of the Kansas Pacific Railroad and extending from the Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains, was made by Government in 1862 to assist in the building of said road, to be patented to said company at stated periods, conditional that after three years from completion of said road all of such land not sold or disposed of should revert to settlement and pre-emption; that said grant in 1864 was increased to twenty miles on each side of said road and the conditions so modified as to provide that before patent should issue said company should pay the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, thereby making the issue of patents optional with the company, but in no way affecting the right of said company to the land; that said railroad was completed as provided, and all the conditions of the grant complied with, except the payment of the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying; that according to the rule which holds good as to individuals, namely, that taxation of the property is proper and just when patent is due, numerous local authorities as long ago as 1868 and 1869 assessed and attempted to collect taxes from said company on said land, and, although sustained by the supreme court of the State of Kansas, they have been uniformly beaten in the Supreme Court of the United States; that in the greater portion of the Territory interested, according to the original provision of 1862 concerning the issue of patent, taxes were due on said property fourteen or fifteen years ago, and the company have been, now ten years since the full completion of said road, taking advantage of a legal technicality, upon the one hand, and of its own refusal to do that which both law and equity require it to do, namely, perfect its title to said land by paying the proper legal charges incident to their survey, without which patents cannot issue; that this continuous and perpetual non-taxable condition of said land is an outrage not tolerated anywhere upon the part of an individual, but one of the evil signs of the times when it can be persistently and successfully carried on by a powerful corporation, whose millions of profit came solely as a donation directly from the people; that the unpatented land of said grant in Kansas is now about three million acres, which should, according to the appraisement of similar property, pay into our local and State treasuries over $200,000 annually; that in consequence of this exemption taxation upon the individual property-owners reaches in some of the counties the enormous levy of 5 per cent.; that such a state of things is at once a fraud upon the United States by nullifying the plain intent of the laws granting said lands to said company, upon the State, counties, and municipalities of Kansas, and depriving them of a legitimate portion of their revenues, and upon the citizens of Kansas by throwing upon them burdens of taxation which law and equity alike require should be shared by the Kansas Pacific Railway Company; that the utter lack of cost of carrying said land is claimed by agents of the company as a portion of its assets and values; that during all these years said company have exercised full control and ownership of this land, selling and mortgaging the same; that corporate and other artificial rights are not and cannot be more sacred than national, State, county, municipal, and personal rights; that it is a well-settled principle of law that no person, natural or corporate, shall be permitted to take advantage of his own wrongs; that the wrong in question, being beyond the reach of State legislation or of the courts of justice, can be corrected only by Congressional legislation; and to the end that the burdens of taxation may be equalized, corporations and individuals alike bearing their just proportions: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we earnestly demand of the Congress of the United States such speedy legislation as will stop this inequality by compelling said company to complete title to said land, thereby securing to the Government the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, which are now unjustly withheld, and placing it in position upon the tax-roll to bear its just share of the public burdens.

Resolved, That the present non-taxable condition of said land is an outrage upon popular government, the very first theory of which is equal and exact justice to all; that it is the duty of the Government to defend the weak from the encroachments of the strong.

Resolved, That we indignantly protest against the influences which have thus far succeeded in perpetuating such injustice as this exemption of Kansas-Pacific land from taxation.

Resolved, The Supreme Court of the United States, having decided that the mortgaging of this land is a disposal of it within the meaning of this grant, thus giving us the contradiction of a title good enough for all practical purposes, but not good enough for taxation, we are of the opinion that an act forfeiting the land would be inoperative, or result in endless litigation, and hence deem the completion of title the speediest way to reach the end sought.

Resolved, That we are in favor of the passage of the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. JOHN A. ANDERSON, Representative from the first district, compelling the company to perfect title to this land; that we rejoice in the ability, boldness, and determination with which Mr. ANDERSON is pushing said measure; and in all his efforts to this end we pledge him our hearty support.

Resolved, That the action of this convention be supplemented so far as they may deem proper by the official expression of the boards of commissioners of the various counties interested, and by petition of the people so far as may be practicable.

Resolved, That the thanks of the people are due to Senator PLUMB for having secured the passage of said measure through the Senate of the United States; and in view of its general importance we urgently request the entire delegation from Kansas to use their utmost endeavors that this great wrong may be corrected.

Resolved, That five copies of these resolutions be signed officially by all the county officers present, and that one copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Senators and Representatives from Kansas, and that they be requested to present the same to the Senate and House of Representatives respectively.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5213) appropriating $20,000 for the purchase and distribution of seeds; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. KING. I ask it be passed now.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. PAGE. I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill, then, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

SUFFERERS BY OVERFLOW.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) making a further appropriation to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and I ask for its present consideration. Let the report of the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the report of the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to which the joint resolution of the Senate making appropriations to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries was referred, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend, in line 3 of the joint resolution, to insert after the words "one hundred" the word "fifty," so as to make the amount $150,000; and after the word "tributaries," at the close of the resolution, to add the following:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such part thereof as he may deem advisable for labor only in strengthening the levees of the Mississippi at points in his discretion, and he shall only employ persons to whom he is issuing rations on account of their destitution caused by the overflow of said river and its tributaries."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the joint resolution be read as amended.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will now be read as it is proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a further sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of furnishing food to such persons as have been rendered destitute by the recent flood in the Mississippi River and its tributaries; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such part thereof as he may deem advisable for labor only in strengthening the levees of the Mississippi at points in his discretion, but he shall only employ persons to whom he is issuing rations on account of their destitution caused by the floods and overflow of said river and its tributaries.

The SPEAKER. The question first recurs on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish my friend from New York would allow me to offer an amendment, to insert after the word "Mississippi" the word "Ohio," whereby we may provide for strengthening the levees of the Ohio River as well as those of the Mississippi.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to consent to that amendment and for this reason: from the information which was before the committee it is supposed it would be, in reference to the inundated country, a very great saving to the Government if at some points in the State of Louisiana the levees could be strengthened. We do not propose to recommend to this House to enter upon any general system of strengthening the levees of the Mississippi River or its tributaries. The only purpose we have by this amendment is actual saving to the Government in the direction of taking care of those who are in a destitute condition.

And we had this further point in view, that these people who are receiving the bounty of the Government, if practicable, should be employed by the Government, in order that they may not get the impression they are to be provided for in the future by the bounty of the United States. In other words, we propose they shall not lose sight of the fact that labor is necessary for their support. It is supposed to a certain extent the labor of people to be relieved can be utilized in the direction of saving certain levees and prevent further overflow, and it is to that end we have proposed the amendment which has been reported to the House.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I believe the gentleman from New York has yielded to me.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois for a question, but not for an amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York this question: there are some levees on the Ohio River by strengthening which we may be able to save some towns upon that river from overflow and consequent damage and suffering. Now, I ask the gentleman from New York if it is proper on the part of the Government to provide an appropriation to protect districts on the Mississippi River and its tributaries from inundation, why is it not also proper and just to protect districts on the Ohio River from inundation?

Mr. HISCOCK. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I have this answer to make. In general terms I for one would be unwilling to vote a single dollar to protect levees that can be protected by the States of Ohio and Kentucky.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But I am speaking of Illinois.

Mr. HISCOCK. Or of Illinois, and I believe that the money which has been spent in the State of Illinois should not have been spent there. I believe there is not a member on this floor from that State who does not recognize that fact and who does not blush at the expenditure which has been made there.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman from New York, why should anybody blush for rendering aid to one destitute in Illinois rather than in rendering aid to one destitute in the State of Mississippi?

Mr. HISCOCK. In these States, especially the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, there is a great black population dependent for their support upon their daily labor. To a large extent they are the wards of the Government, and this is a great disaster that has overtaken them. Now, the Government proposes to extend to them this aid in their misfortune, but there is no more reason that the State of Illinois and the State of Ohio and the State of Kentucky should get that aid from the General Government than there is that my own State of New York should obtain it when she has her temporary freshets on the Hudson River and her citizens suffer thereby.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New York will allow me to ask him a question in this connection, and that is, if he is willing that the public money should be used to relieve destitute Africans, and not be used for the destitute persons of his own race?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will answer the gentleman——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, I know that in Illinois, as the governor has reported to the Secretary of War, there are many white as well as black people upon the banks of the Ohio who are made destitute and homeless and suffering by the recent rise in that river. In places the river extends for miles on the Illinois side and many people, white and black, are utterly destitute and suffering.

Now, what I want to know from the gentleman from New York is, whether he is willing to relieve the colored people on the banks of the Mississippi alone, or whether he is also willing to extend some aid to people of his own race in other sections of the country who are suffering in a like calamity.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am willing, Mr. Speaker, to meet the question squarely. I am unwilling that in the States which I have named aid shall be extended by the General Government to either black or white people. It is only where there are large sections inundated, and which are in the main populated by a class of people that are incapable of self-preservation or self-protection, where there is an army of them in number destitute and homeless, that the General Government should assist.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a single question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. This bill contemplates feeding the destitute white people in this broad area of country which has been overflowed just the same as the black people?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. The object of the Committee on Appropriations is not to make any distinction at all on that account?

Mr. HISCOCK. None whatever.

Mr. ATKINS. But it so turns out that there is a greater number of black people than of destitute white people who have been driven from their homes by this overflow of the Mississippi?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir. There is no intention whatever to discriminate in that regard.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But the gentleman from New York does not answer my question. I wish to know if he is unwilling to extend this aid to the destitute people along the Ohio as well as upon the Mississippi River.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield before calling the previous question to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] for a question.

Mr. MARSH. I wanted to say something more than a mere question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not think it proper that this resolution should be opened up to general debate. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MARSH. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to allow some discussion. I know of no reason (and I know that I now speak with the indulgence of the gentleman from New York) why this proposition which has been added to the bill as it has come from the Senate should not receive some little discussion in this House, especially as there are gentlemen who desire to be heard upon it. I want to say a word or two myself.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman will bear with me a moment, I will say that I have no objection, if it is the desire of the House, that there shall be debate upon the amendment and the resolution for thirty minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and others. That is right.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then that being the wish of the House, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSH.]

Mr. MARSH. I am prepared to vote for supplies to meet the wants of the destitute people who have been impoverished by the recent floods and to relieve the destitution caused by the unusual overflow of the Lower Mississippi. But I am not prepared, under the plea of providing for their temporary sustenance and care, to vote here for an appropriation for the building up and for the repairing the levees of the Lower Mississippi, which are private property. In other words, in the guise of an amendment to help the poor and needy of that section, I am not prepard to see this Congress enter even in the smallest degree upon the policy of appropriating money out of the Treasury to repair and build up the private levees of this river.

Efforts have been made in this as well as the last two or three Congresses, under the guise of improving the channel of that river, to take from the moneys of the Treasury to build up these private levees; and having failed, under that pretense, to make a successful raid upon the Treasury for that purpose, I here object to the same policy, and protest that Congress shall not, under the pretense of feeding disabled and destitute people, begin to do that work.

I am willing to vote for the amendment of $150,000 to feed and clothe and care for these destitute people. But I am not willing that this Congress shall commit itself, in the smallest or remotest degree, to the policy of appropriating money for the purpose of building up private levees. This is but the entering wedge into a policy which has been pressed upon Congress for the last four years, of taking not less than $100,000,000 out of the Treasury for private purposes and private purposes alone. And whether it comes up under the guise, the false guise, of improving the channel of the Mississippi River, or whether it comes under the special guise of aiding and assisting the impoverished people, I oppose it here, and shall oppose it hereafter.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. As I understand the Senate bill it appropriates $100,000 for the relief of the people who are starving in the Mississippi Valley; the Committee on Appropriations propose to make the amount $150,000 for that purpose. With that my heart goes out in hearty accord. Everybody is ready to vote for that and give it his assent now and here.

But there is something further, and I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] has already said on that matter. The Committee on Appropriations propose to ask this House that some portion, large or small, of that $150,000 may be applied by the Secretary of War to rebuild the levees in the Mississippi Valley. The language is: "that he may employ labor for the purpose of strengthening the levees, provided he employs only those persons who are receiving rations under this bill," or something to that effect. It does not prevent him, then, from giving rations and at the same time paying for the labor of the persons who are also furnished with rations. Now that I submit is wholly unnecessary. I am willing we should feed the starving and take care of the suffering if even more than $150,000 should be wanted for that purpose. And let us not delay in granting this relief. I am very glad the debate is not extended over half an hour.

But let us stop here. Will it be safe for this Government that we shall perhaps spend $150,000 in this direction and at the same time establish what shall be a precedent for the expenditure of millions in that valley in the repair of the levees? This House has over and over again taken a stand against that proposition. I know there has been a movement from time to time to get us to commit ourselves in various ways in that direction. But when we sent the Mississippi River commission we distinctly put before them the caveat that we would not proceed with the work of rebuilding the levees. Again, when we made an appropriation in the river and harbor bill we put again before the commission the caution that they were simply to keep within the improvements for the navigation of the river, and to have nothing to do with the reclamation and protection of the land.

This is not a matter of controversy between the different States—Illinois, Tennessee, Louisiana, or any other. But let us say we leave the people of the different States to take care of the protection of their own lands. We will give these sufferers food, we will give them support; but let us not pay for labor on works upon which this Congress has never entered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND.]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. My understanding was that the House gave consent that one half hour should be allowed to debate this question. I now desire to know whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has the disposal of the whole of that half hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from New York, having control of the measure when he took the floor, could occupy it if he chose for an entire hour or yield it to other gentlemen. But he simply gave notice, as the Chair understood, that he would allow debate in his hour to be continued for thirty minutes, controlling the time himself, at the end of which time he would desire a vote upon the matter. The previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. MARSH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARSH. I desire to ask whether the amendment as proposed by the committee is subject to amendment by the House?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not yield for an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter that the House will have to decide. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am not opposed to the resolution. I am heartily in favor of it. But I wish to extend its benefits to the sufferers on the Ohio River as well as the Mississippi.

The gentleman from New York has criticised the conduct of the governor of Illinois in appealing to the Federal Government for aid. I confess with humiliation that I am chagrined at the action of the governor of Illinois, and deeply regret that he has failed to discharge his duty in a proper manner. I believe, sir, an appeal by him to the charitable people of Illinois, to the people of the rich and prosperous State of Illinois, would have been responded to quickly and that the needed supplies would have been furnished at once when the extent of the suffering and of the damage done by the flooding of the southern portion of the State had been made known to them.

But, sir, is it right that I shall remain dumb and neglect to ask for relief to the destitute victims of the floods which have submerged homes in Southern Illinois, when you are voting supplies from the common fund of the nation in other localities, because our governor has misconceived his duty? I admit if the governor of Illinois had acted with the same alacrity and propriety that the gallant and faithful governor of Missouri has acted, we would not be humiliated by the attitude of Illinois as a beggar from the Federal Treasury. As soon as the governor of Missouri learned that a portion of the people of that State were suffering from the inundation of the floods, he immediately took the train for the great metropolitan city of Saint Louis, and by appeals to its charitable and wealthy citizens secured the needed relief. But because the governor of Illinois has been less efficient, has had less regard for the honor and dignity of my State, shall I sit still and vote away thousands of the public Treasury to sufferers in the Southwestern States when a large number of my own constituents, bereft of homes and of the necessaries of life by the same floods, are in actual want?

Sir, I deeply regret the dire necessity which compels me to make this appeal, but duty and humanity demand it of me. I have in my desk a pathetic appeal from honorable and prominent citizens of Southern Illinois, praying for relief to destitute sufferers occasioned by the overflow of the Ohio River, which recites that "two-thirds of Gallatin County, Illinois, has been submerged, and thousands have been driven from their homes with their families to seek shelter and protection in midwinter in the pathless woods as best they can, leaving their property to be swept away by the pitiless waters. Livestock of all kinds, provisions, corn, and household goods have all been swept away, and pauperism, starvation, and suffering confront many thousands unless prompt and speedy relief is furnished." Levees erected to protect one prosperous and growing small city in that portion of the State have been overleaped, and the entire population forced to seek habitation in upper stories and elsewhere from the dangers and devastation of the floods. Other counties are under water, and the levees protecting Cairo, and perhaps other towns on the Ohio River, are momentarily threatened with destruction. If you send supplies to the destitute on the Lower Mississippi, and pay these destitute for labor in strengthening the levees in those localities, why is it that you are unwilling to allow the same aid for strengthening the levees on the Ohio River?

Sir, it seems unfair and highly unjust to deny this relief to the Ohio when you extend it to the Mississippi. Has not Indiana, Kentucky, and Illinois as just claims on the bounty of the Federal Treasury under these sad circumstances as the States of Mississippi, Arkansas, and Louisiana? I only ask for the same kind of relief as that extended to the States on the Lower Mississippi.

One word more. It is a source of regret to me that any governor of any State has applied to the Federal Government before exhausting all efforts to obtain relief for our unfortunate and afflicted at home. I believe that the local governments should furnish all the relief in their power and that the Federal Treasury should be drawn on only when all power of relief has been entirely exhausted at home. It is for this reason that I do not approve of the action of the governor of any State in applying for relief before attempting to find succor from the home government and the people in his own State. I believe if opportunity had been given them the charitable people of the State would have exerted themselves to their fullest extent to afford relief to their own poor, destitute, and unfortunate. I beg of you not to forget or neglect the needy sufferers on the Ohio while you are providing for those who are in distress from the same cause down the main stream.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say one word in reference to the amount reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I consider it inadequate for the purpose to be accomplished.

I introduced on yesterday or the day before a joint resolution providing for an appropriation of $500,000, to be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War to apply the amount to such portions of the country as were most needy and destitute and as could show themselves to be so, either by the representations of the executives of the States in which they lived or of the corporate authorities of the cities and towns adjacent to the country to be benefited. I think now the committee ought to have reported that resolution in that form, and to have given the Secretary of War ample discretion, which I believe he would exercise with wisdom and prudence.

The committee have seen fit to report simply an appropriation of $150,000. The objection is made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] that the committee proposes to give the Secretary of War discretion to employ those to whom rations are to be given in labor for the purpose of preventing the still further overflow of the waters of the Mississippi. The gentleman raises the objection that it is not proper for Congress to pass an appropriation for such purpose, because it might incidentally benefit the owners of the land along which the levees lie.

Some years ago, in 1878, when that same region of country was visited by the plague and the pestilence, the Congress of the United States appropriated at first $500,000 to prevent the introduction and spread of the yellow fever in the southern country. If a few spades full of dirt thrown up on the levees will check the great devastation which is now threatening the whole of that country with want and famine, would not the gentleman from Illinois say that it was a wise and judicious expenditure of money? It is proposed to relieve these sufferers from the flood; and if you can do so by throwing up a little dirt to prevent their homes and cabins from being destroyed, their animals and seed-corn and cotton-seed from being washed away, would it not be wisdom to appropriate money and give that discretion to the Secretary of War?

Mr. MARSH. I can answer the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. I cannot yield in my three minutes.

Mr. MARSH. Then I am not allowed to answer your question.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentlem an can do so in his own time.

The SPEAKER. The time yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has expired.

Mr. MARSH. This appropriation of $150,000 for this purpose is but an opening wedge for $100,000,000, which gentlemen desire to get from the Treasury for the levees of the Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. Then charge it upon your Committee on Appropriations, which report the appropriation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to say that the citizens of Ohio and the authorities of the State of Ohio desire no bounty of this kind for the relief of its citizens. Neither do I believe that Illinois, Missouri, or Kentucky desire any such aid from the General Government. If their citizens have suffered from the overflow they are amply prepared to take care of them, either by aid from their governments or by private contributions. They are not so numerous as to require the aid of the General Government. But it is different with the citizens of the lower States where the overflow is so extensive and the suffering so great. I see no reason why those who accept this bounty should not be allowed to render some return to the Government for it. The Government is asked to make an appropriation to feed and clothe them, and if they can give labor in return it will be better for themselves and the Government will receive some benefit from it. They can be employed in repairing the banks of the river so as to prevent future overflow. I am therefore in favor of the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Of the time which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] stated he would allow for debate there are still remaining twelve minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield three minutes of that time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. CANNON. I should not have desired to say anything on this bill, I apprehend, were it not that this morning, having other duties to perform, I did not attend the meeting of the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore, so far as I am individually concerned, I have not as a member of that committee considered this amendment.

Of course, when it comes to a proposition to feed a multitude of people who are starving, common humanity dictates that we should make an appropriation for that purpose. The question is whether in making such an appropriation we should take a step further than merely helping the people who are starving and suffering from this flood. I would not object to doing that, provided there was no intention to commit the Government to the project of improving the levees of the Mississippi.

If that is intended or supposed or can be tortured into having such an effect, then I am opposed to the amendment. Since the matter has been spoken of, should the amendment be adopted, I think it should be amended by a proposition to the effect that it is not the intention hereby to commit the Government of the United States to the improvement of the levees of the Mississippi.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let us give our money and say nothing further.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Just a question.

Mr. MARSH. Is not the amount of money paid to the laborers on the levees just so much of this appropriation taken away from those who are suffering and needing relief?

Mr. ROBERTSON. How are those parties made destitute except by the breaks in these levees?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON. If the Government in relieving these starving people can utilize their picks and shovels in keeping off this flood of waters, and if this can be done without committing the Government to the policy of improving the levees, I am willing to do it. I think that by the addition of twenty words to the amendment that can be done.

Several MEMBERS. No objection.

Mr. CANNON. With such a modification, I can give the proposition my hearty support.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BURROWS.]

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I believe there is no diversity of opinion upon either side of the Chamber touching the question of granting relief to these destitute people. I have yet to hear from any one a statement that this should not be done. But the question is raised whether or not by the amendment proposed we commit ourselves to the proposition of improving and building up the levees of the Mississippi River. Now, the slightest examination of the amendment will disclose the fact that we commit ourselves to no such thing. It simply declares that a portion of the money to be appropriated shall be used—how? Not to build up the levees, not to enter upon the improvement of the Mississippi River in that direction, but to strengthen the levees at points where in the discretion of the Secretary of War it may be deemed wise.

The scope of the proposition is simply this: at one point on the Mississippi River the levees are about to break away; a city is threatened with inundation. Shall we stand with folded arms until the levees give way and until that city is inundated, and then feed the destitute? This amendment provides simply that when there is a threatened break in the levee the Secretary of War may use a portion of this money to prevent that break. This was the intention of the committee, and it is all that the amendment provides. If the levee is about to give way at any particular point, why should not a portion of this money be used to strengthen it at that point and prevent its breaking, instead of waiting until it does give way and then feeding those who are made destitute?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why not extend this to the Ohio?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I am not discussing that.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I certainly sympathize with all that has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] as to the impolicy of committing ourselves to the maintenance or improvement of the levee system of the Mississippi. The committee that reported this amendment had no intention to do so; on the contrary, every member of the committee who was present expressed himself against that proposition and in favor of guarding the amendment so that nothing could be predicated on it in the future by any gentleman in favor of that vast scheme.

But, Mr. Speaker, there was pointed out to the committee a vast territory in the State of Louisiana, embracing a number of parishes, where citizens have been raising money by contributions to strengthen the levees. My friend from Louisiana [Mr. DARRELL] told us how much had been contributed for the object, and told us further that if the threatened break should take place a large area of country would be submerged, and from 100,000 to 150,000 persons would have to be provided for by the Government; persons having no property, who are dependent upon their daily labor for their support; and that if the break should occur the amount of money necessary for the support of the sufferers would be largely increased. Hence we concluded it would be a wise policy that those whom we are supporting and feeding should be employed in the work of strengthening the levees at such points as may be designated by the Secretary of War in his discretion, not directing him to expend the money at all unless he deems it necessary, but giving him the power to do so if in his wisdom it should seem necessary in the interest of economy and the interest of humanity.

I say again, there was no intention on the part of the committee either to commit itself to the system of improving the levees or to commit this House to that policy. We fear that when the freshet shall have subsided a vast multitude of people will have to be fed, and if to a certain extent we can furnish them with labor and with it in some degree limit the overflow, we will keep down the amount of money which will be required.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York whether the language used in this bill, "the Mississippi and its tributaries," is intended to include the Ohio?

Mr. HISCOCK. In answer to the gentleman I will say that so far as the expenditure of money is concerned for the purchase of rations to feed the destitute, it does include the Mississippi and its tributaries.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And the Ohio?

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Ohio is a tributary.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] whether he cannot make such verbal modification in his amendment as will obviate the objections which have been suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts and other gentlemen. The object which this measure seeks to accomplish is a worthy one, which has the sympathy of this House, and I hope the gentleman from New York will, by some slight verbal change, obviate the objections which have been suggested.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, since the criticisms were made by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Massachusetts, I have placed in the amendment a few words which I believe will sufficiently guard the joint resolution, and I ask that it be reported as it now stands.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman from Illinois has a proposition which, if added to the amendment as amended, will cover all the objections, and enable us to be, as we ought to be on this subject, unanimous.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let the gentleman send up his amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the amendment be read, with a verbal modification I have made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution, as follows:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such part thereof as he may deem advisable for labor only in strengthening the levees where there is danger of breaks of the Mississippi at points in his discretion, but he shall only employ persons to whom he is issuing rations on account of their destitution caused by the floods and overflow of said river and its tributaries."

Mr. CANNON. I will now send up the amendment I have prepared.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall commit the United States to the improvement or maintenance of the Mississippi River levees.

Mr. HISCOCK. I accept that amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I trust there will be no objection to putting in the word "immediate" before the word "breaks."

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly not, and I accept that amendment also.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not accept any further amendment, but demand the previous question on the pending joint resolution and the amendments thereto.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the time of the gentleman from New York has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me two or three minutes of his time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot consent to yield. To some extent I have already trenched too far upon the courtesy of the House.

Mr. MONEY. Then I desire to state that not one single member representing the submerged districts provided for in this joint resolution has been heard before the House. The gentleman from New York has refused to hear from the State of Mississippi by gentlemen who represent the districts inundated, and for whom this appropriation is proposed to be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state if gentlemen think they can impose on the House and the Chair by undertaking to make speeches in violation of the rules, the Chair will take pains to reprimand them at least. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Have I not a right to ask for a division of the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to ask for a division of the vote.

Mr. WHITE. That is all I ask for.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Is the Tennessee River included as one of the tributaries?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question first recurs on the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert "fifty" after the word "one hundred;" so it will read "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was reported, as follows:

At the end of the resolution insert the following:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such part thereof as he may deem advisable for labor in strengthening the levees where there is immediate danger of breaks of the Mississippi River, at points in his discretion, but he shall only employ persons to whom he is issuing rations on account of their destitution caused by the floods and overflow of said river and its tributaries: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall commit the United States to the improvement or maintenance of the Mississippi River levees."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky ask for a division of the amendment?

Mr. WHITE. I am opposed to the whole amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The word "immediate" should come before the word "breaks," instead of before the word "danger."

The SPEAKER. There being no objection that modification will be made.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie.

It further announced the passage of bills of the following titles, in which concurrence was requested:

An act (S. No. 188) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Monmouth;

An act (S. No. 375) for the relief of William G. Budlong;

An act (S. No. 376) to amend section 2763 of the Revised Statutes relating to the use of steam launches in going on board of vessels;

An act (S. No. 650) to authorize the Secretary of War to release a right of way across the lands of the United States at Plattsburgh, New York; and

An act (S. No. 706) for the relief of Martha J. Coston.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. No. 353) to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

FIRE-PROOFING SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from Professor Spencer F. Baird, asking for an appropriation of $50,000 for continuing and completing the fire-proofing of the Smithsonian Institution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISA BODDY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the Indian depredation claim of Mrs. Louisa Boddy; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. ANDERSON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the House will indulge me for a moment, and let me say that I was very indulgent about not calling the regular order before for the reason that I understood the morning hour would be dispensed with. I hope, therefore, that the House will agree to dispense with it now.

Mr. ANDERSON. We had no morning hour yesterday.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 84, nays 4; so (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to enforce treaty stipulations relating to Chinese.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my remarks, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, who wishes to have read in this connection a letter from his district.

Mr. GUENTHER. I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter in connection with the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS MILWAUKEE TRADES ASSEMBLY,
244 WEST WATER STREET,
Milwaukee, March 12, 1882.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Trades Assembly the corresponding secretary was instructed to request the Senators and Representatives from Wisconsin to support Mr. MILLER's anti-Chinese bill. The Milwaukee Trades Assembly is composed of sixteen organized trades unions, embracing a membership of 7,000 united workingmen.

Respectfully,

A. J. SCHWEIZER,
Corresponding Secretary, 345 Fourth street.

To Hon. RICHARD GUENTHER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House of Representatives concluded the consideration of the bill known as "an act to suppress polygamy in the Territories of the United States." That bill received the almost unanimous vote of this House. I did not participate in the debate then, because I believed that in the discussion of the present bill to restrict the immigration of Chinese to this country the remarks I had intended to submit would be equally applicable to the bill now under consideration.

It has been asserted in the most unmistakable as well as positive manner by the thoughtful people of this country that polygamy was a twin relic of the barbarism of slavery. I believe that to be true, and I further believe it to be a companion to that other relic of barbarism, the Chinese cooly contract system as found on the Pacific coast.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican party declared in its platform of principles which was ratified at its last national convention that it was in favor of eradicating the odious system of polygamy from the Territories of the United States. On yesterday the Republican members of this House were almost unanimous in proving to the country that the Republican party, when it made a pledge in national convention, did so with the purpose of fulfilling it. It has shown to the people of this country that with the Republican party platforms were not intended as simply "molasses to catch flies." They declared that polygamy should be driven from the land, and I was glad to see the almost unanimous support given to the carrying out of that pledge, relieving the people of the United States of as great an evil as perhaps there is in it, with the single exception of the one which I have risen for the purpose of discussing.

The question of polygamy, sir, is scarcely to be spoken of in comparison with this question of Asiatic coolyism. I will not dignify their coming here by the title of immigration, but will call it what it is in reality, an invasion. The late President of the United States when he used the word "invasion" knew full well the purport of that which he spoke. Since this bill has been introduced in the House not three months have passed, yet there has come into the State of California alone during that time over six thousand of those people.

Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for me to inform this House and the country that the people of California, as well as of the other Pacific coast States and Territories which are afflicted by this Chinese immigration, are unanimous in favor of this bill. One week ago, on Saturday last, the people of those three States, representing a population of over a million of intelligent people, met in all their different towns and hamlets and unanimously petitioned Congress to pass this bill, which was then pending before the other branch of the National Legislature. A million of people, of freemen—men many of whom crossed the continent in former years, braving the toils and terrors of an overland journey; others who went round by way of the Horn to reach that land of promise; men who went there under the belief that the Congress of the United States would guarantee to every State of the Union a republican form of government—those men and their children now petition you for the suppression of this intolerable evil.

It may be asked why we are opposed to Chinese immigration and what is the necessity for the consideration and passage of this bill which some of my friends, even on this side of the House, regard, I believe, as a very harsh measure.

We are opposed to Chinese immigration, first, because the Chinese are a people eminently unfit to become desirable citizens in a country the people of which cherish the genius of free institutions, as is the case with the people of the United States. And I advance this proposition, Mr. Speaker: that it is a fundamental principle of government that we have the right to legislate for our own best interests and to say whether we shall admit as immigrants to our shores a class of people to whom we are unwilling to extend the rights of citizenship. Before I get through I think I shall be able to succeed in demonstrating the fact and convincing some of the members of this House at least that this people because of their habits and characteristics are unfit to become not alone citizens of the United States but even inhabitants thereof. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a member upon this floor, of either party, who believes that the coming of the African race to this country originally was a blessing to us or to the African himself. Their condition has long been a subject of careful and earnest consideration among thoughtful people.

The time was, Mr. Speaker, when the United States Government undertook to suppress African slavery, or when it entered into an agreement in a treaty with other governments that they would suppress African slavery. It also provided by law that when any vessel having slaves on board was captured upon the high seas by any of our cruisers those Africans found on board and held as slaves, if brought to the United States, should only remain here six months and then be returned back to their native country. Some of the States of this Union, and particularly many of the Northwestern States, had in their organic laws a proviso which prevented any free negro from immigrating within the State or settling there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say one thing, and it is this: the negroes who were born in this country assimilate with the people of the country to a certain extent. They obey the laws and become good citizens of the United States. The Irishman and the German and the Scandinavian when they come here become a part and parcel of the people of this country and are attached to its institutions. But how absurd would be the idea of undertaking to naturalize a Chinaman. When the question would be put to him, "Are you attached to the laws and Constitution of the United States?" what could be his answer? Why, sir, the whole proceeding would be a farce; and every gentleman on this floor who knows anything about the characteristics of the Chinese race will agree with me in that statement. But I have heard it suggested by some, "Wherein do they differ in this respect from the German who comes here, or the Irishman who comes here, or from the Scandinavian who comes here?" Why, sir, during the course of our civilization and since we have inhabited this country, our experience shows that the German, the Irishman, and the Scandinavian come here to make their homes with us and become a part of us. They fraternize with us and we absorb them. They are of our own race, having the same customs, manners, and religion. Where a German came here twenty-five or thirty years ago and reared his family, you cannot now point out his boys as being of German extraction, in contradistinction to other boys of American parentage; you cannot distinguish the difference between the sons of Irish parents and the sons of parents who were born in the United States. They become homogeneous. Their assimilation is completed within one generation.

Therefore the immigration from Europe is very desirable to the people of this country, and particularly to the Pacific coast. We have in California a large area of country. We have a State larger in extent than any other State in this Union except the State of Texas. We not alone desire population but we have done everything we possibly could to aid European immigrants. In the city of San Francisco there is organized a labor exchange for the purpose of sending out agents to the older States and to Europe to induce emigrants to come to California, the Germans, the Irish, and all classes of the kind of people we want to settle with us, and who alone are capable of building up a great State. But with what success have they met? Why, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter, which I will print with my remarks, from the vice president of the association, in which he says that in almost every instance our agents have been met with this reply: "We will not emigrate to California." "Why not? Is it not a great State there?" "Yes; it has natural advantages over almost any other State in the Union; but we are laboring men; we have no capital; if we go there we go there to work with our hands as manual day-laborers, and in your State you have 100,000 adult male Chinese who are giving to-day their day's labor on terms that are degrading; we are unequal to the competition; we shrink from it; we cannot do it, and we will not go to a State where one-sixth of the entire adult male population are Chinese."

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are facts that cannot be gainsaid or denied. We want emigration. We are not trying to exclude all classes of laborers from the United States. We desire to receive the men who leave their homes or country to better their condition. In welcoming all such I will go as far as any man in this House. I belong to and have acted for twenty-five years with that party which has always extended its hands to the down-trodden and oppressed of all lands; to those that leave their countries to come here and benefit their condition; to those who are fleeing from the yoke of bondage in the older countries of Europe. But I do not extend my hand to a cooly slave, brought here under a contract to be placed side by side with the white laboring-men of this country. He who does it may triumph for awhile, but the time will come when the American laborer will cry aloud and demand that protection for himself which is now accorded to the product of his labor in our tariff system, and which is so speciously alleged to keep him from the degrading competition with the poorly-paid and half-starved labor of Europe.

Why, Mr. Speaker, should not I have the same protection for what I have to sell as the gentleman over the way for what he has to sell? The gentleman who produces cotton or any other material out of which useful articles are manufactured demands protection for that. I demand protection for my labor. It is all I have. It is the labor of my hands, and for that I demand the same protection and the same consideration by the American Congress as are given to him who demands protection for his wares and merchandise.

Mr. Speaker, my object at this time is to call attention more particularly to the general features of the bill. For the last twelve years this question has been an annoying one to the Congress of the United States. During my term of nearly ten years as a member of this House I have had frequently, in obedience to a sentiment in my State that was almost or practically unanimous, introduced bills and resolutions for the purpose of preventing the further immigration of Chinese into the State of California. In the Forty-third Congress I secured the passage of a bill, one introduced by myself and reported by Mr Myers, then a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, intended to prevent the importation of coolies.

In the Forty-fourth Congress a joint resolution was passed providing for a commission to visit the city of San Francisco to examine this question, and to report to Congress. That commission was composed of three members of the House and three Senators. It visited the Pacific coast in the year 1876, and its report is now a part of the records of this country.

In 1879 this House by a two-thirds vote passed the bill known as the "fifteen-passenger act." The bill was intended to limit the number of Chinese who might come to this country to fifteen in any one vessel. That bill went to the Senate, was there considered, and was passed by that body with amendments. It came back to this House, and the amendments were concurred in, and the bill was sent to the President. President Hayes vetoed that bill. Upon what ground? Upon the ground that it was in violation of the then existing treaty between this country and China. Let us see what he said. I read from his veto message:

> The lapse of ten years since the negotiation of the Burlingame treaty has exhibited to the notice of the Chinese Government, as well as to our own people, the working of this experiment of immigration in great numbers of Chinese laborers to this country, and their maintenance here of all the traits of race, religion, manners, and customs, habitations, mode of life, segregation here, and the keeping up of the ties of their original home, which stamp them as strangers and sojourners, and not as incorporated elements of our national life and growth. This experience may naturally suggest the reconsideration of the subject as dealt with by the Burlingame treaty, and may properly become the occasion of more direct and circumspect recognition in renewed negotiations of the difficulties surrounding this political and social problem.

Further on he says:

> I regard the very grave discontents of the people of the Pacific States with the present working of the Chinese immigration, and their still graver apprehensions therefrom in the future, as deserving the most serious attention of the people of the whole country and a solicitous interest on the part of Congress and the Executive. If this were not my own judgment, the passage of this bill by both Houses of Congress would impress upon me the seriousness of the situation, when a majority of the Representatives of the people of the whole country had thought it to justify so serious a measure of relief.

The President thereby implied the promise, or held out the inducement to the people of the Pacific coast, that when the then existing treaty relations between this country and China should be revised and amended it would be in order to enact other legislation, and such legislation ought to be passed. Although the President did not state that in as strong language as I have used, it evidently was the purpose and intention of President Hayes in his veto message to hold out the inducement that the treaty should be so amended as to enable us to remedy the evil of which we complain.

Accordingly the two Houses by a joint resolution authorized the appointment of a commission by the President of the United States, which commission consisted of Mr. Swift, of California; Mr. Angel, of Michigan, and Mr. Trescot, of South Carolina. Those commissioners visited China, and succeeded in securing a modification of the treaty known as the Burlingame treaty. In pursuance of that modified treaty, ratified by the Senate and promulgated by the President of the United States, this bill has been prepared, and is now before the House for action. The bill in its present shape is the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. MORSE. What has been done with the treaty?

Mr. PAGE. What treaty?

Mr. MORSE. You said that the President's veto was because of the treaty.

Mr. PAGE. That treaty has been so amended as to permit legislation to regulate, limit, and restrict Chinese immigration to this country.

Mr. CASSIDY. To suspend Chinese immigration.

Mr. PAGE. Yes, to suspend immigration. The first section of this bill defines what Chinese may not come into the United States. It provides—

> That from and after the expiration of ninety days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of twenty years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States be, and the same is hereby, suspended; and during such suspension it shall not be lawful for any Chinese laborer to come, or, having so come after the expiration of said ninety days, to remain within the United States.

That first section of the bill is to carry out the stipulations of the new treaty by providing that the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States shall be suspended for a period of twenty years. I have heard it said by some, who I think have not given this subject the consideration which its magnitude demands, that the twenty-year limitation is too great. Let us examine for a moment and see whether it is too great or not.

If we are to accomplish anything that is absolutely needed to protect us from the evils which we apprehend, which we feel on the Pacific coast, we can do no different than to pass a law which is in strict compliance with the treaty. The treaty permits us to suspend the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States, that suspension to be reasonable. That is the language of the treaty.

Now, I contend that the Pacific coast, as regards cost of transportation, is nearer to China than is the city of Omaha to San Francisco. We confront here this difficulty: as was stated yesterday, in which statement I fully concur, the Empire of China contains 400,000,000 of people, and that empire can spare of its population more than enough to equal the 50,000,000 of people in this country, and in that way can overrun us and drive us out.

I am not afraid that the strong will go down before the weak. This is not a fight in which the fittest survives. It is a question of whether we can maintain our nationality, whether we can maintain the peace and quiet and dignity of the State of California, provided there be nothing in that State but Chinese.

In all the annals of history there can be found no instance where a Chinaman ever fought for liberty. There never was a war in China in all the thousands of years of its history where a Chinaman ever struck one blow for liberty. I have heard them compared with other immigrants to this country. I have heard it stated that they were just as desirable a population in this country as the Dutch and the Irish.

Mr. Speaker, during the late civil war there marched out from the city of New York a regiment known as the Sixty-ninth Irish Regiment, commanded by Colonel Cochrane. But few of the members of that regiment ever lived to return to the place of their enlistment. They fell in battle fighting for the liberties of this country, for the maintenance of our Union. But where from the tens of thousands of Chinamen that were in this country was there one who shouldered a musket and fought for human rights.

Mr. Speaker, I have no sympathy for the man who will stand up here, or anywhere and compare these Chinese immigrants to the Germans or the Irish or any other of the European immigrants who come to these shores. It seems to me that any one who draws a parallel between these classes has read history to little effect.

The other sections of the bill provide that any native of China who comes here for the purpose of trade or travel or of engaging in legitimate commerce may do so unrestricted, and shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges accorded to citizens of the most favored nations. It is provided in another section of the bill that the Chinese who to the number of more than a hundred thousand are already upon the Pacific coast may remain there and be entitled to all the rights and privileges now enjoyed by citizens of the most favored nation. The bill also provides machinery by which those Chinese now upon the Pacific coast may go back to China and then return to the United States, if they so desire, by conforming to a simple method of registration so that they can be identified.

I claim, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the bill is in exact accordance with the treaty which has been assented to by the Chinese Government. The committee was careful in framing the bill not to travel one iota outside of the treaty, but to steer clearly within its provisions. This bill if passed will simply carry into effect the treaty made between the United States Government and the Chinese Empire.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Whenever it is entirely convenient to the gentleman to yield, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I wish to ask this question, because of the colloquy with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] yesterday, in which it was stated that my friend from California [Mr. PAGE] would, when he took the floor, explain the provision of the bill to which reference was then made. Now, at any time that is agreeable to the gentleman, I would like him to tell the House whether this bill is intended to apply to "coolies" only, or whether it covers all laborers. I suppose there is a distinction here, and a very broad one, which I hope the gentleman will make plain. The basis of the argument of the gentleman from Indiana seemed to be that he was in favor of the bill because it would exclude coolies alone.

Mr. PAGE. I will answer the gentleman. He refers to the seventeenth section, I suppose.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAGE. That section provides—

That the words "Chinese laborers," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers, and Chinese employed in mining.

When the treaty was made with the Chinese Government the word "laborer" was used because in that country "cooly" means a day laborer. Hence the word "laborer" was intended to apply to that class of immigrants who come here as laborers of all kinds, whether skilled or unskilled. In the House bill this provision was left out, because the word "laborer" in the very language of the treaty is broad enough to cover all that the friends of the measure desire to cover. And this clause was not in the original draft of the Senate bill as introduced and advocated by my colleague, [Senator MILLER,] but was added in the Senate as an amendment on motion of Senator GROVER. We contend that the word "laborer" as used in the treaty is broad enough to cover all who are intended to be embraced by this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I do not quite understand the gentleman's answer. I presume it is because the gentleman misapprehends me. I want to know whether from his knowledge on the subject he understands the word "laborers" to be broader than the word "coolies?" All coolies are laborers; but are all Chinese laborers coolies?

Mr. PAGE. In China they are.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But are they in California?

Mr. PAGE. In California they are. In no sense are any of them laborers but those of this cooly class. After a residence of nearly thirty years in California, and with an extended knowledge of the Chinese people as found there, I state that there is a Chinese camp or settlement adjacent to every town in the State, such settlement being always known as "Chinatown," and being inhabited by Chinese coolies and women of a class that I would not care to mention in this presence.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman allow me a single question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. In the seventeenth section of this bill it is provided that "the words 'Chinese laborers,' wherever used in this act, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers." I would like to inquire whether the gentleman understands the definition of cooly to include skilled laborers.

Mr. PAGE. I have already answered that question in replying to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I think the meaning of laborer as used in the treaty cannot be misunderstood. I consider it immaterial whether the clause referred to be in this bill or not. It was not in the bill which I had the honor to report from the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILLIS. Will my colleague on the committee yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to say in explanation of this point that the object of the bill is simply to execute the treaty now existing between China and the United States. If gentlemen will read that treaty they will find that by the second article the classes of persons who are permitted to come to this country are distinctly named, and by a well understood principle of law the mention of those classes is of course the exclusion of all others. I claim (whatever may be the opinion of my colleague on the committee) that no Chinese laborer, whether skilled or unskilled, is now under the treaty, provided we enforce it by law, authorized to come to this country as an immigrant.

Mr. PAGE. My colleague on the committee is certainly correct on that point.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts, (to Mr. WILLIS.) Then you do not confine the term "laborer" to coolies.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not; I do not think the treaty so confines it.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I only wanted to understand the gentleman, because there might be a difference of opinion on this point. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] made his argument upon the basis that the term was confined in its meaning to the class of coolies.

Mr. RAY. It cannot be contended that the treaty compels us to pass a law excluding either skilled or unskilled laborers.

Mr. PAGE. The treaty does not compel us to do so, but the obligation of our pledge and our honor compels us to do so; for the party to which the gentleman and I belong promised solemnly in national convention that it would enact legislation of this kind. Whoever wants it to go on record that his party obtained the votes of the people of this country under a false pretense, that some act should be passed by which this evil of great magnitude should be obviated by just, wise, and humane laws, may do so, but let him weigh well what he does.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He has stated that the treaty, according to the construction of himself and my colleague, [Mr. WILLIS,] permits legislation to restrict or suspend Chinese immigration. I desire to ask whether he does not interpret the treaty as giving also the power to prohibit such immigration?

Mr. PAGE. No, sir; the treaty provides that it shall not be absolutely prohibited. The language of the treaty is "limit, regulate, and suspend, but shall not absolutely prohibit."

Mr. WHITE. Does not the interpretation given by my colleague [Mr. WILLIS] to the word "cooly" or Chinese labor practically prohibit Chinese immigration?

Mr. PAGE. No.

Mr. WHITE. Can that be done under the treaty?

Mr. PAGE. As I have already said to the gentleman from Kentucky, it does not prohibit Chinese immigration, because there is a large number allowed to come here as a privileged class, that is those who come here for a legitimate purpose and not as day laborers or coolies.

But, Mr. Speaker, I cannot consent to give up my whole time to the gentleman from Kentucky. He can get the floor when I finish my remarks and speak in his own time. I will proceed therefore with my statement of what the bill provides and what the people of my section of the country desire in this regard.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, particularly to emphasize the fact that we are opposed to all Chinese immigration; because, as I said before, they are of a class we do not believe to be desirable for building up a State in this Union. We do not believe their coming here is beneficial to us. We believe, on the contrary, restriction placed upon their coming will be beneficial to the people of this country. I will show, if the House will give me its attention, why I do not think they are of a class that should come here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to show there is no reciprocity in the treaty between the United States Government and China. The treaty between the United States and China does not allow citizens of the United States to penetrate into the interior of China. We are limited in our settlements to certain Chinese ports under their treaty, while their immigration into the United States is restricted in no way whatever. They can go into the interior of the United States or anywhere and everywhere throughout the land as they please. The treaty provides that American citizens going to China shall be restricted to certain places. There is therefore no reciprocity between China and the United States.

I wish to read what Mr. Seward says on that very subject. Here is a letter from George F. Seward to the State Department, written in 1879:

From the diplomatic point of view, we have always been at a disadvantage in dealing with China. We have voluntarily accorded to her people within our borders the privileges of those of the most favored nations. China, however, has yielded only a few privileges to our people, and we are constantly obliged to resort to diplomatic representations to secure to them the enjoyment of even these. As a consequence, we are always asking something from China, while she has nothing to ask from us. If, however, it has now become an object for her to secure for her people in our country the privileges so freely accorded to them, the situation has changed, and may be taken advantage of in all future negotiations.

A very few words are needed to indicate the lack of reciprocity between us. I think that there are no opportunities of residence or of enterprise from which the Chinese among us are debarred. They can go where they will and do what they will in all our broad domain. But it is not so here. Our countrymen may reside in a few cities only, and they may engage in no enterprise outside of the ordinary interchange of commodities and their transportation between defined points.

That shows, Mr. Speaker, there is no reciprocity in the treaty. The emigration of our citizens into China is restricted to certain settlements, while in this country these coolies can travel to any State in the Union and do anything any non-citizen in the United States can do.

I have said I intended to show the bringing of Chinamen here was not beneficial to us. I will show the characteristics of these people by the testimony of those gentlemen who have given the subject careful study. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read what Mr. Bailey, consul in China for many years, states.

The Clerk read as follows:

The subject of Chinese emigration from this port to the United States has claimed my careful thought and patient investigation for the last four months, with a view to get at the facts, and to understand it in its surroundings and bearings. The whole subject is an anomaly. Rules that will do elsewhere in the world, when applied in considering questions of immigration, have no application to Chinese immigration to the United States. Immigrants to America from other parts of the world go of their own volition, free and voluntary. Emigration from China to all parts of the world is an organized business or trade, in which men of large capital and hongs of great wealth engage as a regular traffic, by which men are bought and sold for so much per head, precisely as a piece of merchandise is handled, at its market value. The poor laborer of Europe applies his own scanty means to get to the land of promise, or is assisted by his friends, charitable societies, or benevolent institutions to reach a place where he hopes to have his toil properly requited, where his labor will inure to his own benefit. The cooly of China is bought by the rich trader to serve his purchaser at low wages for a series of years in a foreign country, under contract for the faithful performance of which in many instances he gives a mortgage on his wife and children, with a stipulation that at the end of his term of service he is to be brought back to China by his purchaser. This contract is sold by the dealer through his agents in the United States and elsewhere at a large advance, and is a source of great profit to the capitalists who have the means to buy and sell large numbers of men. This contract in the United States is no doubt null and void, but nevertheless the cooly will comply strictly with all its terms, a copy of which in Chinese characters is always in his possession, and this he will do because his purchaser holds his household lares in the land to which he always hopes and expects to return in pledge for the faithful performance of his bonds. The central idea of a Chinaman's religion, if he has any religion at all, is that of the worship of the tombs of his ancestors. The superstitions of Fung-Shuey dominate him wherever he may be in the world. The subtile mysticisms of China, so strangely governing all its people in their social, political, and quasi-religious life, are as a hook in his nose, by which his purchaser controls him at all times and in all places; and thus this relation of master and quasi-slave, no matter how many miles apart, is welded by the mystical links of religious superstitions, family ties, and rights of ancestral tombs, which control and regulate the reciprocal duties of trader and cooly in the home land.

The means of obtaining coolies are as various as the ingenuity of man can devise, and are as corrupt as the incentive to large gains can stimulate and invent. Men and boys are decoyed by all sorts of tricks, opiates, and illusory promises into the haunts of the traders. Once in the clutches of these men-dealers, by a system of treachery and terrorism connived at by the local Chinese authorities, whose chief business in life is to "squeeze" the people, the stupefied cooly is overawed into making a contract under such Chinese influences and surroundings as to give it a sacredness of character nowhere else known in the world. From that moment he is the mere tool of the rich dealer wherever he may go. It is difficult for persons accustomed to western civilization to understand the depth and extent of this relationship; but Chinese civilization is unique, perhaps opaque, and cannot be measured by that of any other.

Mr. PAGE. In that same connection I desire to read from a book published by Bayard Taylor, a gentleman of large experience, who had given this subject a great deal of attention. In this book, entitled China, India, and Japan, he states the following; and I wish the House would give me its attention while I read the extract:

It is my deliberate opinion that the Chinese are, morally, the most debased people on the face of the earth. Forms of vice, which in other countries are barely named, are in China so common that they excite no comment among the natives. They constitute the surface level, and below them are deeps and deeps of depravity so shocking and horrible that their character cannot even be hinted. There are some dark shadows in human nature which we naturally shrink from penetrating, and I made no attempt to collect information of this kind; but there was enough in the things which I could not avoid seeing and hearing, which are brought almost daily to the notice of every foreign resident, to inspire me with a powerful aversion to the Chinese race. Their touch is pollution, and harsh as the opinion may seem, justice to our own race demands that they should not be allowed to settle on our soil. Science may have lost something, but mankind has gained, by the exclusive policy which has governed China during the past century.

I place that testimony upon record, so that the members of this House who are called upon to vote on this bill may know exactly what they are doing. We are asked to admit these Chinese, who come at the rate of 3,000 a month, when we already have a population of that race equal to one-sixth of the entire population of Califoraia, and nearly one-half of our voters. I ask the gentlemen to ponder upon these things, and ascertain whether they are true before they inflict upon us still further the evils of Chinese immigration. China has deliberately made treaties with foreign countries, with Spain, for instance, in which they recognize the right of cooly slavery. This is a point which should not be forgotten.

Allow me to read article 107 of the treaty between China and Spain. It is as follows:

Chinese subjects now held to contract labor in Cuba who are incapacitated by age from work, and Chinese orphans and widows who may desire to leave the island and return to China, will be sent home, at its own expense, by the Spanish Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the date?

Mr. PAGE. It is quoted on another subject. I have not time to look for the date.

Now, I want to enforce that thought. Is it possible, Mr. Speaker, that the American people will admit as immigrants to the shores of this country a class of people such as has been described by these writers; and coming, too, from a country where they recognize the right to make contracts for coolies and servile labor? I do not believe that such is the sentiment of this people. Whatever may be the desire to secure and preserve—and we all know that that is universal—the excellent quality and character of European immigration, certainly that desire cannot extend to this degraded class.

Now let me read from what Mr. Trescot says on this subject, who is now, I believe, on a mission from this Government to Peru, when he was formerly Assistant Secretary of State. This is a letter in response to a letter written to the Secretary of State by Lord John Russell of England, in which he recites the fact that England, in connection with other European nations, was about to enter into the consideration of the subject of cooly labor, inasmuch as African slavery was to be abolished, and to open negotiations with the Chinese for the cooly labor. Now, let us hear what he says upon this subject.

I read from that letter what he calls—

A plan of emigration from China, regulated by the agents of European nations in conjunction with the Chinese authorities.

It is not probable that Lord John Russell expected this Government to unite in forming such "a plan of emigration from China." For if he had entertained this idea he would scarcely have omitted "the agents" of the United States from any participation in its regulation. Nor can the President share in the anticipation of her Britannic majesty's government that the cooly trade can be put on any such footing as will relieve it of those features of fraud and violence which render the details of its prosecution scarcely less horrible than those of the middle passage. And he is of the opinion that it would exert a most deleterious influence upon every portion of this country to import into it Chinese coolies as laborers. In the States where the institution of domestic slavery exists these heathen coolies would demoralize the peaceful, contented, and orderly slaves, very many of whom are sincere Christians. And in the free States they would be brought into competition with our own respectable and industrious laborers, whether of native or foreign birth, who constitute so large a portion of our best citizens.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you, sir, the assurance of my high consideration.

WILLIAM HENRY TRESCOT,
Acting Secretary.

That is the language of a man who has had extensive experience in foreign countries among foreign people, and I ask this House if it is not worth while for them to give the subject some thought before they can bring themselves to vote against a bill that seeks to exclude such a class from among our population? With all of this evidence before them, with all of the authorities which I have attempted to bring forward to sustain this position, is there a man who would be willing to vote to admit that class of people?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself particularly to my Republican friends. I am fully aware that the Democratic side of this House intends very generally to support this bill. This subject was embraced in their national platform, and they declared that they would pass a law to prevent the immigration of Chinese to this country; and I wish to read in this connection what they said on this subject. But before doing so, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that I deny emphatically that a question of politics is involved in this case. It is not a question into which politics should enter, nor is it one involving either political party, but the interests and the welfare of all of our people.

I claim that among the people of this country, without regard to political parties, who are afflicted by this class of immigration, there is but one opinion; there is no difference of opinion between the two great political parties on the subject. There is no difference of opinion among the masses of the people, nor is there any difference among the representatives of the various religious denominations; but every man, woman, and child there is in favor of restricting this Chinese immigration, excepting the men who are profited by their coming, and they are the men engaged in passenger traffic and owning ships and railroads to transport them.

Now, the Democratic party says in its platform, in the eleventh plank:

Amendment of the Burlingame treaty. No more Chinese immigration, except for travel, education, and foreign commerce, and therein carefully guarded.

That is the Democratic platform. But the Republican party have carried out the pledge made to the people that after the suppression of African slavery the next twin relic of barbarism, Mormonism, should be also eradicated; and right faithfully did the Republican party meet the issue yesterday, and sustain their pledge to the people. Now, there is another issue that it is said we must meet, and what is it? In the sixth plank of the Republican platform I find:

Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with the Congress of the United States and the treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding the unrestricted immigration of Chinese as a matter of grave concernment under the exercise of both these powers, would limit and restrict that immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable laws and treaties as will produce that result.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are men at present seated upon this floor who were members of the last national convention. I want to ask my Republican friends if that was a plank put into the national platform simply to catch votes, or whether it was put in the platform for the purpose of notifying the people of this country, and particularly those on the Pacific coast, that the great national Republican party of this country was in full accord with the sentiments expressed in that platform?

But, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the letter known as the Morey letter, which was distributed broadcast over the State of California during the last campaign.

This is a copy of the Morey letter, its correctness certified to by William H. Barnum, chairman, I believe, of the national Democratic committee. This was circulated by the thousands and hundreds of thousands on the Pacific coast. This is the Morey letter which I shall send to the Clerk's desk to be read. I took occasion before this debate began to send to the secretary of the late President Garfield for what correspondence had passed between him and the national committee after the publication of what was popularly known as the "Morey letter." I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 13, 1882.

DEAR MR. PAGE: I am in receipt of your request to furnish to you a copy of the Morey letter, together with General Garfield's denial of the same. In compliance therewith I send you inclosed a copy of the forgery and also copies of two dispatches and one letter sent by the late President to the chairman of the Republican national committee.

Fortunately I had among my papers lithographic copies of the letters and newspaper clippings containing the text of the dispatches. Hoping they may be of service, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

J. STANLEY BROWN.

Hon. HORACE F. PAGE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. PAGE. The next is the Morey letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Personal and confidential.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1880.

DEAR SIR: Yours in relation to the Chinese problem came duly to hand.

I take it that the question of employés is only a question of private and corporate economy, and individuals or companies have the right to buy labor where they can get it cheapest.

We have a treaty with the Chinese Government, which should be religiously kept until its provisions are abrogated by the action of the General Government, and I am not prepared to say that it should be abrogated until our great manufacturing and corporate interests are conserved in the matter of labor.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. GARFIELD.

H. L. MOREY,
Employers' Union, Lynn, Massachusetts.

MENTOR, OHIO, October 22, 1880.

To Hon. MARSHALL JEWELL:

I will not break the rule I have adopted by making a public reply to campaign lies, but I authorize you to denounce the so-called Morey letter as a bald forgery, both in its language and sentiment. Until its publication I never heard of the existence of the Employers' Union of Lynn, Massachusetts, nor of such a person as H. L. Morey.

J. A. GARFIELD.

MENTOR, OHIO, October 23, 1880.

To Hon. MARSHALL JEWELL:

Your telegram of this afternoon is received. Publish my dispatch of last evening if you think best. Within the last hour the mail has brought me a lithographic copy of the forged letter. It is the work of some clumsy villain who cannot spell nor write English nor imitate my handwriting. Every honest and manly Democrat in America who is familiar with my handwriting will denounce the forgery at sight. Put the case in the hands of the ablest detectives at once and hunt the rascal down.

J. A. GARFIELD.

MENTOR, OHIO, October 23, 1880.

DEAR SIR: In my dispatches of yesterday and this evening (which are also sent you by mail) I have denounced the Morey letter as a base forgery. Its stupid and brutal sentiments I never expressed nor entertained. The lithographic copy shows a very clumsy attempt to imitate my penmanship and signature. Any one who is familiar with my handwriting will instantly see that the letter is spurious.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. GARFIELD.

Hon. MARSHALL JEWELL,
Chairman Republican National Committee,
241 Fifth avenue, New York.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, there is not, I believe, a citizen in all this broad land who does not know that the Morey letter, that which was attempted to be ascribed to the late President Garfield, was absolutely and unqualifiedly a forgery. He, sir, like many of us, as I did myself, came up from the lowest walks of life, and he had sympathy with the laboring-men of this country, and if I had never had the honor of his personal acquaintance I would still have known as well as I do now that it was impossible for him ever to have written such an infamous letter as that.

And what was it made the country think that letter was so infamous? What is in the letter but what is advocated by every man who is in favor of Chinese immigration into this country? The sentiments expressed in the "Morey letter" are absolutely and unqualifiedly the sentiments of those who believe that it is right to bring here millions of cooly slaves that their labor may be brought into competition with and their society insult the respectable people of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what did our late President do? After he had been nominated for President, in his letter of acceptance, in obedience and in regard to the platform of the Republican party, he says:

> The material interests of this country, the traditions of its settlement and the sentiment of our people have led the Government to offer the widest hospitality to immigrants who seek our shores for new and happier homes, willing to share the burdens as well as the benefits of our society—

How well, Mr. Speaker, he knew the sentiments and the characteristics of the people about whom he was writing—> willing to share the burdens as well as the benefits of our society, and intending that their posterity shall become an undistinguishable part of our population. The recent movement of the Chinese to our Pacific coast partakes but little of the qualities of such immigration, either in its purposes or its results. It is too much like an importation to be welcomed without restriction; too much like an invasion to be looked upon without solicitude. We cannot consent to allow any form of servile labor to be introduced among us under the guise of immigration. Recognizing the gravity of this subject the present administration, supported by Congress, has sent to China a commission of distinguished citizens for the purpose of securing such a modification of the existing treaty as will prevent the evils likely to arise from the present situation. It is confidently believed that these diplomatic negotiations will be successful without the loss of commercial intercourse between the two powers which promises a great increase of reciprocal trade and the enlargement of our markets. Should these efforts fail it will be the duty of Congress to mitigate the evils already felt and prevent their increase by such restrictions as without violence or injustice will place upon a sure foundation the peace of our communities and the freedom and dignity of labor.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the House will allow me to conclude.

Mr. ORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let the gentleman take all the time he wants.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I am proud as a Republican to stand in this presence and indorse as the Republican party of this great nation indorsed not only its platform at Chicago but the eloquent utterances of its great leader. I am here as a Republican to do my full duty in carrying out that promise to its fullest extent. I would do no injustice to these people; I would do no injustice to the grand claims of our country and its traditions that this was the "land of the free, the home of the brave," and the asylum of the down-trodden and oppressed of all nationalities.

Mr. Speaker, it is the home of the down-trodden and the oppressed; it should be the asylum and the refuge for him who is fleeing from the yoke of bondage and persecution in his own country; but it is not the home for millions of cooly slaves and serfs who come here under a contract for a term of years to labor, and who neither enjoy nor practice any of our religious characteristics. They are men who build their Joss houses in every town in our State; men who set at defiance our laws of morality; men who bring their women here as slaves and sell them for immoral purposes; men who are not allowed by their own country to bring their virtuous women, their wives and mothers, to this country. Out of the four or five thousand Chinese females in California there are not six who pretend to be good women. They make no pretensions to that. And yet my friend says, "Permit them to come, for they ought to be naturalized." Why, sir, a Chinaman has no more regard for his oath than a savage who never saw a white man in his life. He has no regard for it absolutely. A Chinaman would not swear to the truth if it were profitable for him to swear to a lie. That is the characteristic of their race and of those of them who have come to our shores. It may seem harsh to say so, but I am here to tell the truth. I have resided with them for thirty years, and I know my colleagues around me will indorse every word I say in reference to them. Do you want to inflict upon us people of that class? Would you open our ports to them and let them come here as they please?

Mr. Speaker, I see at my left one of the Representatives of the State of Massachusetts, [Mr. MORSE,] a State that has as much, and perhaps a greater amount, according to its population, of intelligence than any other State in the Union. It is a State that every representative and every citizen of this great country delights to honor. It sends able representatives to the national halls of legislation. Its people are generally, I will not say always, but generally, just. They have their ideas of things, and we have ours. But upon all great principles there can be no difference among people who understand them.

You gentlemen from Massachusetts represent districts where I have no doubt there are a large number of operatives, white men, women, and children, employed in your manufactories. Now, suppose they were discharged to-morrow and made to give place to an equal number of coolies, what would be the condition of affairs in the State of Massachusetts?

The people of this country are taxed everywhere for the purpose of ennobling and dignifying labor. Everything we wear, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] said the other day, is taxed. We tax everything and everybody. What for? Let it be understood, now and once for all, that I have always been a protectionist and in favor of protecting the industries of this country by levying a sufficient tax upon manufactured articles from abroad to prevent our labor and capital from being brought into competition with foreign labor and capital. But does protection simply mean that you will protect the industries of this country and its capitalists, while the laborers in all portions of this Union are to be brought into competition with a class of servile labor which they cannot compete with, because it will work for wages which would be absolutely ruinous to them?

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE. Who employs these Chinamen?

Mr. PAGE. They are employed by men engaged in different branches of industry. Many of them manufacture themselves in San Francisco, and have driven from our manufacturing industries nearly all of the skilled artisans of our own race. It is impossible for any American-born or any foreign-born citizen of the United States, who has a family to support, to engage in competition with this sort of labor successfully.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAGE. Let me get through with this part of my argument and I will yield to the gentleman. A Chinaman coming into California, comes there, as I have already stated, under a contract. He wears clothes from head to foot that are made in China. His blouse, his wooden shoes, everything he wears is made there. His food is brought from there, for it consists principally of rice and tea. He eats no beef-steak or mutton-chops or potatoes. He is trained to live on the smallest amount of food.

The Chinaman has no children to take care of, no wife to clothe and support. He has none of the responsibilities of citizenship thrown upon him. He cares nothing for your institutions. He laughs at us when we talk about our great country. His desire is to go back to China from whence he came; and as a citizen of California I am always glad when he goes. It is provided in his contract that if he dies in this country one of the companies to which he is assigned shall send his bones back to China; and they are sent back in every instance.

Now, on this question of labor, I want to say that you demand protection for your industries—I demand protection for the laboring-man, the man who labors with his hands. Give this man the protection which you claim for yourselves.

Is this high protective tariff only for the purpose of taxing the people of this country that the rich may become richer and the poor poorer? Or is it intended to levy a tax on articles manufactured and produced abroad so as to protect us against the cheap labor, not the cheap money, of Europe and Asia? If that is so, then why should we be asked to open our ports to this class of laborers? It is true that but a hundred thousand have come here, but a drop in the bucket compared with the 400,000,000 that are ready to come here and compete with us.

Mr. DAWES. Would the gentleman accept a slight amendment in the language of section 17 of this bill?

Mr. PAGE. When the bill comes to be considered by sections I will hear the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman would not be willing to accept it now?

Mr. PAGE. I would not be willing to yield now. I do not propose to have the gentleman interrupt me——

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, only to ask him if he will accept an amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I cannot tell until we come to consider the bill by sections. Then I will hear the gentleman's amendment and give him my answer.

I have already occupied more time than I expected. I hope to have the pleasure of closing the debate after the previous question shall have been ordered on this bill. I know members of this House will excuse me if I have spoken with some degree of feeling on this subject. I have endeavored to be perfectly frank and fair in my statements. I have no disposition to misrepresent the characteristics of the Chinese who are now upon the Pacific coast or those who may come hereafter. This question is one of pressing importance. Action should be taken now.

Knowing that a bill of this kind was being considered, the Chinese are coming to the Pacific coast in great numbers since the adoption of this treaty. As I said before, 6,000 of them have come within two months, and they will continue to come at the rate of 3,000 a month, coming by every steamer, to compete with our labor and to take the place of a better class of people. Under the laws of the United States they are not citizens, and cannot enter on the public domain. They are a proscribed class, and I believe that this House will think they are properly so. In all their history they have never shown that they were capable of becoming citizens of this country. They cannot assimilate with us, and have no desire to do so in a single particular.

Therefore I hope this House will give this bill earnest consideration, and that we will redeem our pledge to the people of this country, the solemn pledge made in convention.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. In all conventions.

Mr. PAGE. Yes, in all conventions of 1876 and 1880, of both parties.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. The three parties.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; the Greenback party, representing the labor interests of this country, also inserted in its platform resolutions in reference to the subject. We as legislators cannot afford to ignore it. This bill or one substantially similar is the only measure I can conceive of that will be of any benefit to our people. If anybody can devise something better I shall be glad to support it. But the only objection I have heard to this bill is that the restriction of twenty years against the immigration of these Chinese is too long.

Mr. MORSE, (in his seat.) The remedy is, not to employ them.

Mr. PAGE. My friend says the remedy is, not to employ them. My friend represents himself and he represents a community who, I believe, will employ this kind of labor when they cannot get any other. Laborers will not come to California now to engage in our industries because if they come they are brought in competition with this class of servile labor.

I was about to speak in regard to the twenty years' limitation. The House bill provided for twenty-five years. I freely admit that any limitation short of prohibition is unsatisfactory to the people whom I represent. But they know that they must accept the best bill they can get. They know that any measure which can be adopted must be the result of a compromise; that many persons are unfamiliar with the characteristics of these people with whom we have to deal, and that something must be conceded to the sentiment of other portions of the country in this respect. But in my judgment a limitation of twenty years is the lowest that should be adopted. If it is wrong, Congress can at any time repeal it and allow these immigrants to come here without restriction, as they have been doing for more than thirty years.

During all this time Congress has done nothing. Notwithstanding there have come here day after day, month after month, and year after year petitions from the people of Nevada and California asking Congress to do something, action has been delayed and delayed just as it has been upon the Mormon question. Finally, thank God, the people of this country became aroused; and we yesterday adopted a measure which we hope will sweep from existence the barbarous crime of polygamy. So I hope that on to-morrow, when this bill shall be voted on, we shall, so far as legislation can do so, sweep out of existence this other relic of barbarism, and place upon the statute-book a law which will protect the labor of this country from the influx of Chinese immigration.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from California a question, because it is only the desire, I imagine, of every gentleman present to arrive at precisely what is right, if he will bear with me for awhile.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Now, I understand the gentleman from California to say that the people of his own State would not be satisfied entirely with anything short of absolute prohibition?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Very well. Now, suppose we provide for this limitation for a less period. The treaty with China does not allow absolute prohibition. The treaty says that the suspension shall be reasonable. Now, suppose we suggest to the gentleman from California that if the Congress of the United States shall agree to limit this to ten years, if the other provisions of the bill are correct, and let it be tried in California for that period. Then the country, after the experience of ten years with reference to the working of the system, can place it upon a permanent footing. If satisfactory to the people and if found to be wise and beneficial, it goes without saying that it would become firmly fixed in the legislation of the country.

Mr. PAGE. I think that would not be satisfactory.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. But it might, in the nature of things, be found to be an unwise provision; and after the lapse of ten years, and I simply suggest this to the gentleman from California, there would then be abundant time to re-enact it into a permanent law, after giving it a fair trial. Now, I make this suggestion because there are a number of gentlemen who want to carry out the doctrine of the platform as to what is reasonable, to its fullest extent; and in that view I believe that the limitation of twenty years is too long, and in that opinion other gentlemen coincide with me.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him if he would vote for the bill with the limitation fixed at ten years?

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. With some other slight alteration, I think I would.

Mr. PAGE. Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say that for thirty years the Chinese question or the question of Chinese immigration has been a bone of contention in the State of California. Now you put this limitation at ten years, and no sooner does this Congress adjourn and we go home than that question begins to be agitated in the politics of the country as to whether they will permit the limitation to expire after the ten years or whether they will re-enact and renew it, and in that way the Pacific coast will be kept in a state of constant agitation. Now, I think that the limitation of twenty years is short enough. We have had, as I have said, thirty years' dealing with this class of people, and let us, for God's sake, be at peace for twenty years at least. Let us have a rest for that length of time, so that if necessary at the expiration of that period Congress may, if it sees proper, repeal the law.

But I will answer my friend from Massachusetts by saying, if he insists upon ten years' limitation and will make it applicable to the port of Boston alone, I am perfectly contented. Protect the people of California who have had their full share of this evil. Close the balance of the ports of the country to this class of immigrants, but open, if you wish, the port of Boston for ten years. I shall not object to that. I shall accept it in all kindness, because if the people of that part of the country are satisfied to try the experiment I have no objection. Let them try it, and if the people of the eastern part of this country, Mr. Speaker, desire this thing they can have an opportunity of testing its results. Close the ports of the Pacific coast and the rest of the country for twenty years; but open, if you please, the port of Boston for ten years.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the gentleman know that we cannot enact special legislation of that kind?

Mr. PAGE. I think we can, sir. China has given an example, and, if you want to, follow it and apply it to this country. They limit us to the ports where we can enter their country. Open the port of Boston, if you choose, and give us freedom from the curse on the Pacific coast for awhile at least.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I would like to say a word in response to the gentleman from California, because I suppose he meant that suggestion in entire kindness, though somewhat by way of a joke.

Mr. PAGE. I pledge my word of honor that I was in all earnestness, and had no intention whatever of making the suggestion by way of a joke.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. This bill covers all the ports——

Mr. PAGE. It does now; but you can make an exception. You can except the port of Boston from its operations.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I am satisfied that my friend from California only means to permit them to land in Boston and go overland to California. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. Open the port of Boston to them if you choose, and keep them there. I don't mean to say that I am, as a friend to Massachusetts, as a man who respects that great old Commonwealth, in favor of inflicting upon them this curse. I would be opposed to any such action. I would regard it an injustice to them to open that port to Chinese coolies and serfs. I now yield the floor.

Mr. TYLER Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to enter upon a very full discussion of this subject, but, as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, which reported favorably the House bill, I would not be understood to approve of all the provisions of this Senate bill, which has been substituted therefor, and which, in my judgment, contains some very objectionable features. Some of its provisions are in violation of our treaty obligations, in violation of good faith with the Chinese Government, and in violation of our honor as a nation.

It is clearly the right of every nation to place limitations upon immigration to the country over which it has jurisdiction and control. If there were any doubt as to the existence of this right under the law of nations, in this case the United States and China have declared through the solemnities of the treaty entered into between the two nations in 1881, that whenever in the opinion of this Government the coming of Chinese laborers to this country or their residence therein affects or threatens to affect the interests of this country this Government may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. Thus the right to make restrictions has been settled both by fundamental law and by treaty, and the question is now purely one of governmental policy. The treaty was not entered into on the part of this Government in anticipation of a possible occasion for its enforcement at some remote future time, but from a sense of the immediate necessity for placing restrictions upon the importation of Chinese coolies to the Pacific coast, and it must be accepted as a declaration by the United States of its policy in regard to the increase of Chinese labor in this country.

It is a beautiful theory that this nation should be an asylum for the poor and ignorant and oppressed of every country under heaven. We point with pride to the self-evident and immortal truths set forth in the Declaration of Independence that all men are endowed with the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and yet the framers of the Constitution evidently did not organize this Government for the people of every nation and every clime. In the preamble they declared—

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Thus the fathers, after a weary struggle, established this Government for themselves and their posterity, reserving the right to admit the people of other nationalities to the enjoyment of its benefits on such terms as they might thereafter elect to impose.

When this Union was formed, had there been danger of an influx of foreigners into any of the thirteen States in numbers sufficient to control the industries thereof, or, in the language of this treaty, in numbers sufficient to affect, or threaten to affect, the interests of those States, does any one suppose that the fathers and founders of the Republic would not have adopted measures to restrict such immigration? No, they would not thus have hazarded the liberties which by their valor in the field and their wisdom in political councils they had secured.

So much for the abstract right; and yet the true policy of our Government, founded in justice and according with the spirit of liberty, which is the genius of our Government, is to permit immigration to this country to those who will become actual citizens thereof, to the full extent to which it can be done with safety to our own interests as a nation. A reference to the recent treaty will show that it was made in this spirit and in pursuance of this policy.

Then, sir, when the Chinese come to this country in the character of real immigrants; when they come as the Germans, the Irish, and the Norwegians come, to purchase lands, become homesteaders and actual settlers thereon; when they come breaking away from the oppression of the Old World to enjoy and help maintain our free institutions; certainly when they come bringing promise that under the influence of our schools and churches and social systems they will eventually become Americanized and Christianized, we cannot limit or suspend their immigration until it shall have assumed greater proportions than it has yet done. But, according to the report of the joint special committee that was sent to investigate this subject in 1876, according to the testimony of the honorable gentlemen who represent the Pacific States in this and in the other House of Congress, according to all the reliable information that is obtainable, in comparatively few instances do these conditions exist. Thus far the Chinese have not come here to become citizens, to perform the duties and obligations and receive the benefits incident to citizenship; but generally they have been imported here as laborers, without families, by capitalists and speculators, to compete, and, because they are content to live so cheaply and in so degraded a manner, to compete successfully with American labor, while from their utter diversity from us in race, language, ideas of religion and government, customs and habits, they become assimilated to us far less readily than the people of any other country. Therefore, upon the immigration of this class we are warranted in placing restrictions.

There is danger of freighting the old ship of state too heavily. Between five and six hundred thousand foreigners landed in New York alone in 1881. The total immigration to the United States last year, exclusive of the Chinese, was more than six hundred and fifty thousand. These people came from countries in Europe whose forms of government are very different from our own. They come to this country to make for themselves homes, to be gradually assimilated to our social and political systems, and become American citizens; but the experiment of adding half a million foreigners annually to our population is, to say the least, a dangerous one. We have in our midst 6,000,000 human beings whom we have recently raised from slavery to the high rank of citizenship, the great majority of whom are illiterate. We are informed on reliable authority that there are 2,000,000 of people in the Southern States who are without the advantages of education. Statistics show that 20 per cent. of the legal voters of the United States are illiterate, and to-day the intelligent people of this country are anxiously considering the problem, Congress is deliberating upon it, whether a republic can long endure with ignorance for one of its corner-stones. Besides these dangers the Government is confronted by that relic of barbarism, polygamy, whose advocates and devotees now control one of our great Territories and are rapidly extending their power into others. A hierarchy, erected in a republic in direct and deadly opposition to the spirit of republican institutions, is the anomaly and the danger that Mormonism presents. It is high time for the use of circumspection and care about the further admission of incongruous and adverse elements into the country.

Mr. Speaker, the party which gentlemen on this side of the House have the honor to represent has for a distinctive policy the protection of American manufactures and industries. It advocates this policy not only for revenue purposes but also to protect American manufacturers against the system of cheap labor in Europe. Where, then, would be the consistency in shutting out the products of cheap labor in other countries, and admitting cheap labor to our own manufactories? It may advance the interests of manufacturers; it is starvation and ruin to American laborers.

In conclusion, I desire to call attention to the clause in the treaty which declares that the limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and to express the hope that gentlemen who are more directly interested in this bill than other members of the House may be willing to accept amendments to it so that it will conform both to the letter and spirit of the treaty.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill as it has passed the Senate, for the following reasons: The Chinese have not yet come to this country and it does not appear that they propose to come in such numbers as to justify the adoption of so strict and severe a measure as this, to be enforced by such heavy penalties. This bill renders it too difficult for others than laborers to come. It in effect shuts out all classes of Chinese except the few mentioned in the second section of the treaty. As the gentleman on my left [Mr. STONE] just now suggested to me, it is about as near an absolute prohibition as an ordinary lease of nine hundred and ninety-nine years is to a sale. It is not within the terms or spirit of the treaty of 1881. It is not "reasonable" that there should be a suspension of Chinese immigration for twenty years. Five years, or at the extent, ten years, is long enough to try the experiment. Again, there is no reason why Chinamen who desire to renounce their allegiance to their own government and become citizens of the United States should not be admitted to naturalization. If the bill should be amended in the directions above indicated I shall be happy to give it my support, otherwise I shall vote against it.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] asking leave to append to my remarks the four articles of the treaty of 1881, which are as follows:

ARTICLE I.

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

ARTICLE III.

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

ARTICLE IV.

The high contracting powers having agreed upon the foregoing articles, whenever the Government of the United States shall adopt legislative measures in accordance therewith, such measures will be communicated to the Government of China. If the measures as enacted are found to work hardships upon the subjects of China, the Chinese minister at Washington may bring the matter to the notice of the Secretary of State of the United States, who will consider the subject with him; and the Chinese foreign office may also bring the matter to the notice of the United States minister at Peking and consider the subject with him, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit may result.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the speech of the honorable Representative from California [Mr. PAGE] to-day. His constituents are to be congratulated that they have upon the floor of this House one who can so fully, so ably, and so earnestly present their views upon this important subject. And although from my stand-point I am obliged to differ with my friend from California, yet I do it with the utmost respect for his sincerity in the views which he has so ably presented.

I note, Mr. Speaker, at the outset, one remarkable circumstance connected with the history of this bill. It has become an opinion quite generally entertained that we have in this House devised a set of rules better calculated to promote a do-nothing policy than any ever before devised by human ingenuity. Hundreds of just claims linger on their way through this House. They cannot be reached because of the rules. A superannuated system of taxation still keeps above ground like a belated ghost that cannot find its grave; but no scheme of revision can be adopted because of the rules. It was important, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that some supreme exigency should arise which should prove to the country that the rules will not always prove a barrier to Congressional action when a sufficiently important occasion demands that action.

What is the exigency that has now caused these rules almost insuperable to be suspended and has brought this bill before the House in preference to the measure to which I have referred and others of a kindred nature? Why, Mr. Speaker, the census of 1880 disclosed the alarming fact that among 50,000,000 of American people there are mingled 105,000 Chinamen. It disclosed the fact that between the years 1870 and 1880 42,000 Chinese immigrants found their way to these shores; nay, more, that during the last year 20,000 came, while 10,000 of those who were already here went home; making a net increase during the year of 10,000 of these dreaded Mongolians.

Here, Mr. Speaker, was a crisis demanding Congressional action. And more and worse than what has already occurred is anticipated. A great meeting was held in California but a few nights ago. The papers have brought us accounts of that meeting. I have a letter which was received by me in common I doubt not with my brother members, entitled "The Chinese question considered by a calm and dispassionate merchant." I read some of the other speeches at that meeting and I am inclined to think that this merchant is correctly described as "calm and dispassionate" in comparison with the others who spoke at the meeting. I said that the actual facts disclosed by the census were not all, that more and worse are anticipated. Let me read from the speech of this "calm and dispassionate merchant," delivered but a week ago in the city of San Francisco, and let the members of this House arouse themselves to the portentous crisis which is upon this country, the importance of which is such that it must take precedence of all questions of taxation, of all questions of the improvement of the Mississippi River, and of all questions of a similar nature, and that Congress should attend at once to the passage of this bill. Let me read:

> It is said that in Great Britain there will be put afloat this year at least one million tons register of iron ships and steamers; more probably, twelve hundred thousand tons or twelve hundred vessels of a thousand tons each. If occasion required, China could buy one-half of this fleet and with her own and such as she could get together she could start a thousand vessels on short notice, bringing two thousand men each and hurl, almost before we know it, two million people on our coast. This could be readily multiplied, so that five, ten, or even twenty millions could be here in a comparatively short time. What would become of us in such a contingency? It is appalling to contemplate. And yet unfortunately it is all within the bounds of possibility. Survey the strategical and political situation and you will see that from Europe we have little to fear—from China everything.

It is no wonder that when this cry of distress came up, shall I say from the sand-lots of San Francisco—the cry has ascended above the groundlings, and has reached the boxes—not from the sand-lots alone, but from all San Francisco and California came the cry; it is no wonder that in this emergency the able and distinguished gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] who accomplishes almost everything that he undertakes, should raise his voice to the rescue louder than Don Quixote when he spurred his trusty Rosinante to the world-renowned battle of the wind-mills. That gentleman is a good Republican. He has assumed here to-day to speak for the Democratic side of this House. He cannot speak for the Republican. And the reason why he cannot speak for the Republican side is that, although he still represents one great wing of the party, that wing has been thrown into a panic.

Mr. PAGE. I do not undertake to speak for the Republican party. But I spoke for its platform and the pledges it had made in its national convention. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts stand by the platform of the last national convention of the Republican party?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts stands with his feet on every plank of that platform, and he has always stood there as he stands there to-day. And here let me follow out the suggestion which I was just making and say that this gallant left wing of the Republican party is in a panic and has fallen back upon the main body, which must stand firm that it may rally the demoralized wing and reform it in its usual good order.

Mr. PAGE. I would like the gentleman from Massachusetts to say what he means by the "left" wing of the Republican party.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The western wing, then, or the Pacific wing, if that will suit the gentleman any better. Let me, as I was about to say, explain to him what the Republican platform really means, and then show to him that I stand upon it better than he does. It is the Democratic platform that says "no immigration;" it is the Republican platform that recognizes the right of every nation to protect itself against pauperism, disease, and crime, and it says "Restrict and regulate immigration so it shall not endanger the country or any portion of it."

I agree with what was said yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] that he is worse than an infidel who does not protect his own family. I would protect every section of these United States by proper guards against immigration, so as to keep out an undue influx of pauperism, crime, and disease.

These difficulties are not experienced alone on the western coast. Only the other day the Representatives of New York called attention to the necessities of that State for protection against foreign immigration, not to turn back that tide of immigration which has set in through New York and made it great and powerful, but to regulate it so that crime, disease, and pauperism shall not flow in unchecked.

That is what the Republican platform means; not to prohibit immigration, not to suspend it, but to regulate it, to restrict it, to control it, and to make it, instead of a curse, instead of a danger, a blessing and a source of prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I protest against the passage of this bill. I protest against it in the first place for economical and commercial reasons. This Republic has fought and bought its way from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The faces of its people have ever been turned toward the west. This Republic has sought and has acquired this vast territory, and it has built railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific, not merely to improve and possess the territory that lies between the two oceans, but that it might find its way to the Pacific and there indulge that craving which is more strongly characteristic of the Anglo-Saxon than of any other race, for commerce and adventure on the seas.

These great railroads, extending from the East to the West, are not merely transcontinental; they have commenced the circuit of the globe. Bills of lading are to-day made from European cities through Boston, New York, and Philadelphia to Chicago, Saint Louis, and San Francisco. Shall they stop upon the Pacific coast? That is not the purpose for which those railroads were built.

More than a generation ago Thomas H. Benton, statesman and prophet, standing in the city of Saint Louis and advocating the building of Pacific railroads, stretching his arm westward said: "There lies the road to Asia." He portrayed the prosperity and the wealth that would come to this country when over the iron track of those railroads the oldest empires should pour their riches into the lap of the youngest.

Now, when we have built our railroads girdling the entire continent, when we have reached the Pacific coast, we are told that we must stop; we are told that we must not reach our hands further and gather in the wealth of Pacific and Asiatic commerce. I have read in the papers that already merchants in California have lost large sums from the withdrawal of Chinese commerce. That but forebodes what will happen universally in California. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] yesterday read from the opinions of a certain Mr. King—I know not who he is—that it would not affect our commerce and trade with China if we should pass this bill.

Sir, the Chinese are shrewd, they are human; they know well enough who are their friends, and they know well enough who are their enemies. The trade which we have had with China has been the result of the treaties which have been made with that empire. I want to refer gentlemen to the expressions of the Chinese commissioners through whom this last treaty was negotiated upon this subject:

> China and the United States have been on friendly terms from the first; but from the ratification of the Burlingame treaty a decided strengthening in our relations of amity has been seen. * * * Since the establishment of treaty relations between the two countries, citizens of the United States in China have not been relegated to the jurisdiction of Chinese authorities; China has accorded this privilege to the United States. Chinese subjects have been permitted to go and come at their pleasure; the United States has granted this concession to China. At the ratification of this treaty the people of both sides of the Pacific Ocean laughed, shouted, and clapped their hands with joy and pleasure. Friendly relations were firmly established. Divisions were obliterated. The people could come and go as they chose, and the governments only heeded the wishes of the people.

Such were the expressions of pleasure and gratification and friendship which these oriental people entertained on account of the amicable treaties which the United States had seen fit to make with them.

Twenty-five years before, Anson Burlingame, a citizen of my own State, was the first, I believe, to attempt to establish treaty relations of a friendly character between China and the United States. China then began to unbar her ancient gates to the entrance of modern civilization. But it was reserved for Anson Burlingame to complete the work of opening the gates of China to the citizens of the United States.

The gentleman has said that China is not wholly open to citizens of the United States. It is not. But by the Burlingame treaty citizens of the United States have all the advantages and the rights of citizens of the most favored nations. Wherever a citizen of any nation can go in China, there under the Burlingame treaty can go a citizen of the United States.

As I said, the work commenced by Caleb Cushing, a citizen of Massachusetts, was consumated by Burlingame. We have not forgotten how even California threw open her gates to receive him, as he returned from the Orient accompanied by the Chinese ambassadors. He was the genius of the new civilization, leading the representatives of the old from the cradle of the race to this new empire, to show them the glories of a better civilization than any they had ever known. And he was a fit person to represent this new civilization. With the brain of a statesman, the heart of a philanthropist, and the port of a prince, he was well fitted to represent in the Old World the civilization of the New. There are men who were young with Anson Burlingame, and who remember yet the inspiration of his noble spirit; remember yet how his marvelous eloquence thrilled their hearts. They will not easily let perish from the earth the work which is imperishably connected with his name.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this bill would shut the doors of China to American influence and American trade. It would prevent the surplus products which now crowd our warehouses, and which the 400,000,000 of the Chinese people need, from finding that market which would be so advantageous to us.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to join issue again with the gentlemen who have advocated the passage of this bill. They say, as I understand, that we of the East are sentimental in our advocacy of certain impracticable principles. They say that this bill is in the interest of the laboring classes of this country, and they ask how we can go to those who work in our factories and shops and defend our opposition to this bill. I will answer them. We protect labor by elevating it. The laborer who works for low wages never crowds out the laborer who works for higher; he only crowds him up. There is always an amount of labor at the base of the social fabric which is merely mechanical, which calls into exercise the brawn and the muscle, not the brain and the heart. The more we can withdraw our laborers from that kind of labor the better it is for them. There is enough for them to do on the higher levels in our society. The higher the kind of labor the higher the laborer.

The arguments on the other side are the same arguments which were heard a hundred years ago against the invention of labor-saving machinery. When the genius of British inventors began to devise machinery to perform labor which previously had been performed by hand, there was the same outcry against them and the work of their inventive genius that there is to-day against Mongolian labor in this country. It was said, "You are driving out the laborer from his employment; you are providing means of taking from him that which is necessary for his support." Thus the working classes in many cases were incited to break up the looms and the spinning-jennies which were being invented, because they believed they were antagonistic to their interests. But, Mr. Speaker, who doubts now that every invention which liberates the laborer from the lower grades of labor is a benefit to him and elevates his condition? So the introduction of new classes of laborers who are willing to do labor upon the lowest grade elevates those who have hitherto been employed in that labor into a higher sphere. Hence I am in favor of the introduction of persons who will perform these lower kinds of labor, even to the temporary exclusion of some, because ultimately and speedily it results in their elevation and improvement.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill because it violates our treaty stipulations with China. Article first of the treaty with China agrees that—

> The Government of the United States may "regulate, limit, or suspend" the immigration of Chinese laborers, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable.

Now what was the intention of the commissioners of the two governments who made this treaty when they used this phraseology? To ascertain this it is necessary to refer to a protocol containing the memoranda and conversations which were had between those commissioners. We find that in the first place the Chinese commissioners supposed our commissioners had come to obtain by treaty the right to regulate and restrict Chinese immigration on the points to which I have referred, namely, to prevent the introduction of disease, pauperism, crime, and cooly labor into the United States. The Chinese commissioners at once stated that they were ready to negotiate upon these points. They called the attention of our commissioners to the fact that Mr. Seward, representing the United States in China only the year before, had entered on negotiations looking to prohibiting the four classes, namely, cooly laborers, criminals, prostitutes, and diseased persons, from coming from China to the United States. Our commissioners hastened to assure the Chinese commissioners that their mission covered more than this, and said that they were unaware of any authority or approval given by the Government of the United States to the proposal submitted on his own responsibility by Mr. Seward to the Chinese Government.

And our commissioners then submitted a project for a treaty which included the words which are contained in the treaty, to wit, "to regulate, to limit, and to suspend," adding the words "to prohibit." So that in the projet submitted by the American to the Chinese commissioners were the words, "that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, suspend, or prohibit such coming or residence of immigrants from China into the United States." The Chinese commissioners declined to consider a proposition so broad in its significance, and they stated:

> We infer from the phrases "regulate, limit, suspend, or prohibit," the first is a general expression referring to the others. When Mr. Holcom, secretary of the American commissioners, was at the yamin the other day we said to him that the use of the term "prohibit" was not in accordance with the treaties in force and that China would assuredly find it difficult to adopt it.

They then go on to repeat their readiness to negotiate to the end that a limitation either in point of time or numbers may be fixed on the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States. So that the Chinese commissioners refused to negotiate with the intent that immigration of Chinese laborers should be prohibited, but only that it might be "regulated, limited, and suspended;" that it might be limited either in point of time or numbers. They go on to say that if after the limitation shall have been agreed upon and settled the immigration to the United States becomes small, then the action should be as heretofore; that is, in accordance with the stipulations of existing treaties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this was the position by existing treaties: citizens of the United States had all the rights and privileges of citizens of the most favored nations in China, and the citizens of China had the right of free immigration to the United States. Our commissioners sought to modify the terms of those treaties. The Chinese commissioners were willing to negotiate for reasonable modifications in the matter of limitation or even of suspension, but refused to consider negotiations for the purpose of prohibiting immigration. And as the result of these negotiations the word "prohibit" was stricken from the projet, and the treaty was adopted and agreed to without that word, but with the words "regulate, limit, and suspend."

The Chinese commissioners criticised the word "suspend" and objected to it, and in order to meet that objection our commissioners said that they were willing to insert the modification that the suspension should be reasonable. More than that, they said that beyond that China must trust to the friendly consideration and good judgment of the Government of the United States after those negotiations, and with such an understanding the treaty was agreed to in the terms in which it is before the House. Now comes my friend from California and says after all these negotiations, after this explanation of the phraseology of the treaty between its negotiators, it is within the meaning of that treaty absolutely to prohibit and declare unlawful for twenty years all immigration of all laborers from China to the United States; that this is "reasonable" and within the meaning of the treaty; that this is within the understanding of those mild, unsuspicious commissioners who represented the great empire of the east in these negotiations with the commissioners of the great empire of the west.

The gentleman from Indiana said yesterday that the idea the Chinese had of citizens of the United States was that there is not much fight in them, but that they are pretty shrewd at a bargain. I fancy after this bill shall have been passed by this House, whatever may be their opinion in the first respect they will not change or modify it in the last as to the shrewdness of American negotiators in making a trade.

Mr. Speaker, in old times the words punica fides were the synonym for national treachery and faithlessness. If after negotiations between China and the United States, under cover of a treaty provision modifying an old and existing treaty so that we may suspend within reasonable limits immigration of laborers from China, we declare that immigration unlawful and suspend it absolutely for twenty years, I fear we shall do much toward writing our name over that of ancient Carthage on the annals of national perfidy. I object to this bill, because I believe it is in conflict, if not with the words of the treaty, at all events with its spirit.

The gentleman from California contends that it comes within the words of the treaty. Ay, perhaps it does; but if so, while it keeps the word of promise to the ear it breaks it to the hope.

Further than that, Mr. Speaker, the treaty still recognizes the right of all Chinese citizens except laborers to come here, with all the rights and privileges of the citizens of the most favored nations, and for those already here to remain. Then this bill goes on to provide that every Chinaman who may come here under the provisions of this bill must be visèd and marked and certified and travel like an express package with a tag on it all over the country, and from China to the United States and from the United States back again. And this is the way that it treats citizens of China who are entitled to all the rights and privileges of citizens of the most favored nations. Suppose he should lose his certificate; suppose the tag should get off him——

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAGE. The law provides and the treaty provides that those who are already resident here may come and go between the United States and China as they please, and that they shall otherwise be entitled to the rights and privileges of citizens of the most favored nations. The certificate provided for in the bill is in their interest. The restrictions apply only to those who have never resided here.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. What citizens of what other most favored nations are required to go through with these ceremonies in order to their identification? Where is the provision if they lose the first certificate that they can get a new one?

Mr. PAGE. What is the question?

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Where is the provision if they lose their certificate they may obtain another?

Mr. PAGE. If there is no provision in the bill providing if they lose their certificate they may obtain another one, undoubtedly there is no objection to that modification being made. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts vote for the bill with this clause inserted? If so, I will agree to its insertion at once.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I propose to do no such thing.

Mr. MORSE. Nor any of us.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. "Nor any of us," says my good friend at my right.

No, Mr. Speaker, this bill not only violates the provision of the treaty in absolutely prohibiting the immigration of Chinese laborers into this country for twenty years, and then reserving the right immediately on the expiration of these twenty years to add another term indefinitely as we please, but it violates the other provision by which those who are permitted to come and reside here, because they are here now or because they are travelers or students, or those who come here as a matter of curiosity, have imposed upon them these onerous and circumstantial details of registration and certification.

I am opposed to this bill, not only because it is opposed to the commercial interests of the country, not only because it is opposed to the treaty provisions between this country and China, but because it is opposed to the traditions of the country, to those great principles of equity and right upon which it is founded. We wrote over the very gateway to our national career the words, "that all men are created equal," and I do not see with the gentleman from Indiana any reason at the end of our first hundred years to erase that legend and write over it another.

The SPEAKER. The time yielded to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I take the floor and ask to be recognized.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask only for a few minutes longer to conclude my remarks.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope unanimous consent will be granted.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I have nothing written, and therefore it will be difficult for me to take up the thread at another time.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to have an understanding by which both sides of this House can be heard. Nobody has been recognized on this side, and I do not think it is proper that the debate should be confined entirely to one side of the House.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts has not consumed much of the time of the House, and as he is now making an interesting speech upon an interesting subject, I hope there will be consent to allow him to proceed.

Mr. CAMP. Unanimous consent has already been given to the gentleman from Massachusetts to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed by consent. For the information of the gentleman from Texas and others, the Chair will also state that there was no gentleman on this side of the House who desired to speak for the bill, and the gentlemen were recognized on this side for that reason. The gentleman from Vermont yielded his time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. REAGAN. We have already had two hours for and two hours against on the other side of the House, and none on this side.

The SPEAKER. That was by arrangement of the committee. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has participated in that arrangement, and will be next recognized on this question.

Mr PAGE. I want to say for both sides of the House that all gentlemen will be allowed the opportunity of discussing the bill.

The SPEAKER. No gentleman shall lose any of his rights. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I am very much indebted to the House for its indulgence. As my friend from New York kindly remarked, I have not occupied a great deal of its time since I have been a member of this body. I have but a few words more to add to what I have already said.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is contrary to the principles upon which this Government was founded. I was trying to show that I can see no reason why, after our experience of one hundred years, we should go back upon our path and adopt another principle than that which we have thus far maintained. We have maintained this principle under circumstances of trial and of danger such as can scarcely ever come upon us again. Allusion has been made to the fact that 6,000,000 of people are now a part of the body-politic, and readily becoming assimilated with it, with regard to whom not fifteen years ago it was declared that they never could become so assimilated. And now, sir, they are not only a part, but recognized by all on both sides of this House as an important factor in our great social system; and I say, Mr. Speaker, that after we have survived the prophecies of peril that were made, after we have survived the doubts and the fears that were entertained upon the absorption of this almost foreign element into our body-politic, we need not tremble now at the incoming of a few thousand Chinese laborers every year. That legend to which I have referred we have maintained for one hundred years, and it has been seen by all nations, and they have hailed it as a sign of promise, an omen of hope, as the Roman army hailed the sign of the cross which they saw in the sky. And now, sir, I for one am unwilling at this day to blot out that legend and prove recreant to the great destiny which lies before this country as it enters upon the second century of its existence.

Panics have swept over the country before, and great men have stood firm against them; such men as Seward, and Sumner, and Oliver Morton. These men did not yield to the fears of panics which swept over the country. And whose memory is held higher in regard today, the memory of these men who stood firmly by principle, or the memory of those who were swept away by the influence of panic and dismay which soon proved to be causeless and temporary?

No, sir, whether this bill pass or not, of one thing I am sure, that its success can be but temporary. For myself I should be willing to join with my friend from California in the enactment of a law placing limitation or restriction, perhaps even a short suspension, upon this immigration. I do not know but that I would be willing to go as far as that. But against this bill as it now stands, against its essence and spirit, I can only utter my final protest, and say that I know it must fail because all the principles of justice and of equity, those fixed stars whose serene light falls upon Asia as well as America in all their courses, fight against it, and as surely as they were set in their places by the hand of God and made eternal they will in the end prevail. [Applause.]

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I hold in my hand the notes of one of the stenographers of the House in reference to a portion of the proceedings to-day, which I will read:

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the time of the gentleman from New York has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me two or three minutes of his time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot consent to yield. To some extent I have already trenched too far upon the courtesy of the House.

Mr. MONEY. Then I desire to state that not one single member representing the submerged districts provided for in this joint resolution has been heard by the House. The gentleman from New York has refused to hear from the State of Mississippi by gentlemen who represent the districts inundated, and for whom this appropriation is proposed to be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state if gentlemen think they can impose on the House and the Chair by undertaking to make speeches in violation of the rules, the Chair will take pains to reprimand them at least. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now I want to state the circumstances which attended this very remarkable declaration by the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will give his attention. The Chair understood the gentleman to rise to his feet for the purpose of suggesting something that was privileged.

Mr. MONEY. I did, sir. If the Chair will be patient one moment to see what the gentleman from Mississippi wants to state about this matter——

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to be understood, too, about this matter. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Mississippi that if he rises for the purpose of making any correction in this matter the Chair will recognize him; but if he rises for the purpose of passing a criticism on the Chair the Chair will take occasion to call him to order himself.

Mr. MONEY. I rise in my right as a member of this House to protest against the language of the Speaker of this House as a gross breach of decorum and a violation of the privileges of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will be seated.

Mr. CAMP. I demand that the words of the gentleman from Mississippi be taken down by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to see that the gentleman from Mississippi now preserves order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let the words be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will be seated.

Mr. MONEY resumed his seat.

Mr. CAMP. I demand that the words of the gentleman from Mississippi be taken down before any other business is transacted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again it has no desire to be oppressive in any sense upon any member; but that when a gentleman insists upon making a speech when out of order it regards itself bound to call him to order. Now, the Chair will state that if the gentleman from Mississippi desires to make any explanation or correction of what he said the Chair will recognize him. But the Chair will not recognize the gentleman for the purpose of making an assault upon the Chair out of order.

Mr. MONEY. I was not objecting to the action of the Chair or of any member of this House in calling me to order. I am willing to acknowledge that for a minute or half a minute I was out of order. But I rose for the purpose of saying that under no rule of this House has the Chair the authority to reprimand or punish in any manner any member.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a point of order. It is that the gentleman from Mississippi is not in order in putting the Chair on trial; he is not in the line of privilege in arraigning the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the gentleman from Mississippi was recognized for the purpose of making any explanation he desired with reference to his own conduct; but beyond that the Chair holds that the gentleman is out of order, and will exercise his right as the presiding officer of this House in insisting upon the gentleman being in order.

Mr. MONEY. I recognize very fully the right of the Speaker to keep order as the organ of the House. But I rose as a matter of privilege, in justice to myself and in justice to the House, to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Speaker had threatened to reprimand a member of this House, had reprimanded a member of this House, and that it was a breach of the privileges of the House to do this thing. And I want to put on record——

Mr. HISCOCK. I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is violating now the privilege given him.

Mr. MONEY. I have been advised, with all deference to the authority of the Speaker, by some of the best parliamentarians in the House, that I had a right to rise to a question of privilege and that it was due to myself to do so. Now, if gentlemen will hear me for one moment——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will suspend for a moment. The gentleman from Mississippi was recognized for the purpose of making any correction he desired with reference to his own conduct. But the Chair will state that beyond that it holds the gentleman has no right to go. The Chair still recognizes its right to preserve order in the House, and when a gentleman insists upon speaking, as the Chair then believed the gentleman from Mississippi was doing, out of order and in violation of the rules it was the duty of the Chair to insist upon order.

Mr. MCLANE rose.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. One at a time. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] is recognized for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MCLANE. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to rise to a question of privilege. Now, I submit to the Chair that if the gentleman from Mississippi rises to a question of privilege he must be left to state the question of privilege, and the Chair must submit that to the House to pass upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland rises to a question of order or a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will state it understands that it was the right of the gentleman from Mississippi to rise to a question of privilege. But the Chair will state that that question of privilege only extended to a vindication of himself, and in no sense to a violation of all the rules of parliamentary law in assailing the Speaker by a criticism, and not a justification of his own conduct.

Mr. MCLANE. The Chair misunderstands my inquiry. It was in truth not a parliamentary inquiry. I rose, I said, to a question of privilege, and that is the right of the honorable gentleman from Mississippi which the Chair has evaded. Now, I have the most perfect respect for the Chair, and shall not utter a word inconsistent with the most perfect respect for the Chair.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MCLANE. Pardon me; I have the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I thought the gentleman was through.

Mr. MCLANE. I shall not utter a word except in perfect deference to the Chair. But while I have respect for the Chair I also have some respect for myself. And when I find the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] called to order by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and taken to task by the Chair, neither the gentleman from New York nor the Chair recognizing the fact that the gentleman from Mississippi took the floor on a question of privilege—the Chair did not do so and has not done so except in its last remark to me, when it then recognized that the gentleman from Mississippi was upon a question of privilege—what I submit to the Chair is that I now rise to a question of privilege, which is that when a member of this House rises to a question of privilege and submits to the Chair that his privileges have been invaded, it becomes the duty of the Chair to submit that question to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is mistaken.

Mr. MCLANE. I should like to know how and in what?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again that the gentleman from Mississippi was recognized by the Chair on his statement that he rose to a question of privilege; the Chair so recognized him from the first. But the moment that the gentleman from Mississippi violated his right to rise to a question of privilege, other gentlemen as well as the Chair called him to order. The Chair recollects no case where a gentleman having arisen to a question of privilege that question was submitted to the House. In above four years' experience here, no case is remembered by the Chair at this moment where the question was submitted to the House whether a gentleman was speaking to a question of privilege or not.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to ask the Chair whether it intends to be understood as holding, either by its statement now or by its action to-day, that it is either the right or the duty of the Speaker of this House to reprimand a member without the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that it is made its imperative duty to preserve order, and whatever steps are necessary, within the power of the Chair, to accomplish that, this Chair will assert. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Chair will not evade my inquiry.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will not resume their seats when they are out of order and called to order, the Chair may go further, if necessary, than merely to reprimand if they still insist upon violating the rules of the House.

Mr. KENNA. I trust that to a fair parliamentary inquiry the Speaker will honor me with a direct answer. I ask the Chair now to state to me, as candidly as I propound the inquiry, whether the Chair desires to be understood as holding it to be his right or duty to reprimand a member on this floor without action of the House?

The SPEAKER. When any gentleman is in the act of openly violating the rules of the House, which the Chair is charged with enforcing, the Chair will state that it regards it as not only a duty but a right to reprimand him and to insist upon his being in order; not that he has the right to call a member up and punish him, but that he has a right to insist upon his keeping order.

Mr. KENNA. In the entire absence of any practice or precedent to that effect, I am glad to have the frank admission of the Chair.

Mr. MONEY. I claim that I have the right to proceed upon a question of privilege, and I propose to explain the action which I have taken this evening. It is but justice to me that the RECORD should contain what I have to say in defense of myself.

If the House will permit me to proceed, I will say that I had no intention of proceeding out of order. Gentlemen were entirely too precipitate when they made the point of order upon me. They anticipated what I had to say.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again that the gentleman from Mississippi will be recognized to proceed, but not for the purpose of making an assault upon the Chair.

Mr. MONEY. As I was proceeding to say, here was an appropriation—I am speaking now without any passion whatever, and simply in defense of my rights and the rights of the House—here was an appropriation of $150,000 for the benefit of the people of the submerged districts in several States. By the rules of the House, or by consent, I know not which, thirty minutes of debate were permitted on that question

Very naturally the people for whom this appropriation was to be made expected to hear what their Representatives had to say on this subject. They want to know whether we identify ourselves with the proceedings for their relief.

The gentleman from New York, by no rule of the House that I am aware of, farmed out the time for thirty minutes. I asked him several times; so did the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. KING,] representing the submerged district, (I represent two counties totally submerged;) so did the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN;] so did the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ROBERTSON;] so did the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS,] each of us representing these identical people in whose behalf you here to-day voted this appropriation, asked that gentleman for two or three minutes to speak for our constituents upon this question so vital to their comfort and almost to their salvation. Sir, these requests were denied; and the floor was accorded to other gentlemen who had no direct interest in the people concerned. Then, when the gentleman rose to move the previous question, I rose to a parliamentary inquiry, as is shown by the notes of the stenographer. I asked the Speaker of the House if the gentleman's thirty minutes had expired. The Chair replied that they had not. I again asked that gentleman to give me two or three minutes of the thirty which this House had said should be consumed in debate on this question; and the gentleman again refused.

Then, having the floor, not interjecting my remarks into the body of any man's speech, but having the floor, and before I resumed my seat I desired in less than the space of one minute to state that the gentlemen representing the submerged district had not been heard. Upon that the Chair said that if gentlemen insisted upon——

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him right there? [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. MONEY. I yield to the gentleman for a question, of course.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman now declares that having the floor for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry, he went on to make a speech; and there is where he was out of order.

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman's remark is entirely superfluous. I was about to say that I admit for that one-half of one minute I was out of order. Now the gentleman's point goes for nothing.

Mr. ROBESON. Oh, no! It goes for everything.

M. MONEY. No, sir; for I admit that before I took my seat I did make that remark in addition to my parliamentary inquiry, and that in this I was out of order; that I was subject to a point of order not only from the Speaker, but from any member of this House; and had any member, having the same right in this respect as the Speaker, called me to order, I should have submitted to the call. Why, the whole thing passed in a breath almost. Just before that we had an exhibition from another member on the other side, who injected a speech here in the most violent manner, brandishing his fists, speaking himself hoarse almost with excess of feeling, and nobody spoke of "reprimanding" him.

Now, gentlemen, I make this point. That there is no rule which permits members of this House to be reprimanded except by order of the House itself, and that no creature of this House has a right to arrogate to himself and usurp the functions and power of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, take that down, if you please.

I want to say further, that so far as I am personally concerned I wished simply to show to the people whom I represent that I am incapable of submitting to a thing of this sort without a solemn protest against it. And I tell you, gentlemen, the right of every member of this House is concerned in this thing, and if the Speaker of this House has the right of his own motion to punish a member (and to reprimand is to punish) I tell you he has usurped the very function and power and authority of this House itself, and it is the grossest breach of the privileges of this House.

Mr. MCLANE. Now, I desire to rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state——

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I am entitled to rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it entirely proper that I should say something about what occurred this afternoon. The gentleman from Mississippi did come to me and ask that he might have two minutes upon the pending question. I declined to yield to him, and I did so because I understood that he was in favor of the amendment proposed to the Senate resolution by the committee, and I desired to give the larger proportion of the time to the opponents of the measure, that it might be fairly considered and thoroughly ventilated in the House. He says I did not yield to any one on that side of the House representing the great district injured by the overflow. I believe I yielded to General HOOKER.

Mr. MONEY. He does not represent the inundated districts.

Mr. HISCOCK. I supposed he represented the people suffering from the flood and overflow.

Mr. MONEY. Not a man.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yielded to another gentleman on the other side of the House, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] I yielded, I believe, to still another. When I said to the gentleman from Mississippi I could not yield to him, he, in perfect good faith and good nature, said to me, "I wish you would say at least I am in favor of this measure." I suggested to him that he might ask me for time to speak on the subject, and that that would put him on the record as being in favor of the measure. He expressed himself as entirely satisfied. I supposed he was when he went away, and therefore when he rose to his feet and asked for further time I believed it was in pursuance of the conversation that he and I had on the subject.

Mr. MONEY. I had no such conversation with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CHALMERS. Let me state that the conversation was with myself.

Mr. HISCOCK. I was surrounded at the time by a crowd of gentlemen on the other and this side of the House. I sought, to the best of my ability, to accommodate them and to promote good feeling; and more than that, to promote the legislation we had brought here, for which they were all clamorous, and which we were trying to give them.

Mr. CHALMERS. I wish only to interrupt the gentleman for a moment to say that the conversation he refers to was had with me, and not with my colleague.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to say that I came here not with a privileged resolution, for it was not a general appropriation bill, and I was trespassing, not upon the patience and courtesy of the House, but upon the courtesy of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] who had a special order in charge that had been set down for this day. It was by his courtesy that I was pressing this matter before the House for action, and in the interest of gentlemen on the other side of the House who desired the starving multitude in the inundated districts might be fed.

We had put into the joint resolution a provision which excited criticism on this side of the House, giving authority to employ labor in protecting the country threatened with overflow, in strengthening the levees and confining the Mississippi within its channels. That amendment was projected by us, and all we contemplated was in the interest of the people of the overflowed district and of the district threatened; and I supposed the advocacy of the amendment proposed would have greater weight and its success be the more completely insured if it received the support of this side of the Chamber, as it did that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and myself. I was seeking to procure legislation, and I was only afraid that arguments from those on the other side of the Chamber supposed to be in favor of this levee system would be more likely to imperil the measure than to advance it.

And, sir, no action of mine was taken with a view of crushing out either the gentleman from Mississippi or this amendment, which I had brought in here for the preservation of the people and to a certain extent the protection of these works, in order that further distress might be avoided.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to state for the benefit of the gentleman from New York as well as my colleague that a conversation precisely similar to what he relates occurred between him and myself.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken. I thought it was with the gentleman from Mississippi, his colleague. I intended to be courteous to them both.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a question of privilege. I do not wish to take any part in the discussion between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

At an earlier hour of the day the Chair had occasion to call the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to order. The Chair has so stated to the House. Now, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to his rights under the rules of this House in calling a member to order; and I want this House, if it can, to divest itself for a moment of any feeling on this question. And not only do I mean no disrespect to the Chair, but I believe when the Chair will give its attention to the question of privilege I am about to make, the Chair will take back frankly and fully the language used by it in calling the gentleman to order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the language used by the Chair in calling the gentleman from Mississippi to order, as taken down by the official reporter, is as follows:

> The Chair wishes to state if gentlemen think they can impose on the House and the Chair by undertaking to make speeches in violation of the rules, the Chair will take pains to reprimand them at least.

Now, what the Chair has a right to do in calling a member to order is set out explicitly in the rules, and what is the right of a member when called to order is also set out in the rules. The language used by the Chair involves censure and reproof, which is the province of the House and not of the Chair. The right of the Chair is to call the member to order, who shall take his seat, and the House shall then permit him to proceed or not, or reprimand and censure him, at pleasure. The Chair, equally with the member, is subject to the rules of the House, and the Chair violates the privilege of the member when it presumes to reprimand him.

Under the ninth rule the Chair is under obligation if a question of privilege is made to entertain it at least to the extent of submitting to the House the question whether or not it does present a question of privilege.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire to what point the gentleman from Maryland is addressing himself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland stated that he rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. McLANE. And I have read the language of the Chair addressed to a member of this House, which is in my judgment a breach of the privileges of this House, and I submit to the Chair that any member of this House who submitted to his reprimand would be unworthy to hold a seat on this floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland may measure by some peculiar standard the privileges of members——

Mr. McLANE. I measure them by the rules of the House, to which the Chair is equally bound with the members thereof. These rules constitute the law of the House, and the Chair violates the privileges of the House in violating these rules. [Cries of "Order."]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries, or in the lobby, may cause the same to be cleared.
> If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.
> If a member be called to order for words spoken in debate, the person calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

Mr. McLANE. I ask to have Rule IX read, also, in this connection.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

Mr. McLANE. Then on page 331, under the head——

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to let this go over as the unfinished business? [Laughter.]

Mr. McLANE. Under the head of questions of privilege, the Chair will find that whenever the Speaker is of opinion that a question of privilege is involved in a proposition he must entertain it in preference to other business, and it is also made his duty to submit it to the House as to whether it does or not present a question of privilege.

Under these rules I submit that the language of the Chair involves a breach of the privileges of the House and that it is the duty of the Chair to submit that question to the House that it may decide whether or not it is a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, in answer to the gentleman from Maryland, that the gentleman from Mississippi was recognized on a question of privilege, on his own statement that he rose for that purpose. But the Chair felt bound, especially after other members had called him to order, to call the gentleman to order also, when he violated the privilege that he claimed he rose to assert.

Now, the Chair understands thoroughly well that when a gentleman is called to order, as provided in the rule which has just been read, for words spoken in debate, it becomes the duty of the Chair to cause the objectionable words to be taken down and read to the House; and the matter is then submitted for the consideration of the House. But the Chair does not understand that when a gentleman flagrantly and persistently violates the order and rules of the House, by taking the floor, or in any other way violating the rules of the House, it is the duty of the Chair to take his seat and wait quietly until the gentleman has gone to such limits that some gentleman on the floor may feel it his duty to call him to order. The Chair feels it his duty under such circumstances to interpose and maintain and enforce the rules of the House. Now, the Chair in the present instance was doing no more than insisting that the gentleman from Mississippi should resume his seat, and the Chair simply declared if the gentleman did persist in violating the rules of the House the Chair at least would reprimand him. But the Chair did not proceed to reprimand the gentleman from Mississippi at all. The Chair has done no more with reference to the gentleman from Mississippi than it did with the gentleman from Illinois, on the left of the Chair, who spoke in violation of the rules of the House, and the Chair insisted upon his being in order.

The Chair wishes to state now, and wishes it to be distinctly understood, that it proposes, without undertaking to make any threat toward any gentleman, to maintain the rules of the House, and that it will require the rules, within very reasonable limits, to be obeyed in future. It is due to the gentleman from Mississippi to say that, as far as the Chair has any knowledge of him in this and in other Congresses, he has behaved with great courtesy toward every person, with this exception.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is this. I desire to see if I am correct in my understanding as to the statement made by the Chair a few moments ago. I do not understand the Chair to hold that it has a right, in a technical sense, to reprimand a member without the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. Except when gentlemen insist upon violating and continue to violate the rules of the House. It is certainly true that the Chair under the rules has the right to reprimand a gentleman when he is persisting in a violation of the rules of the House. That is all the Chair has done.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the House adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise for the purpose of asking the Chair to permit me to dissent from the proposition he has announced. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I protest that the Speaker has no right to reprimand any member unless in pursuance of an order of the House to that effect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all I wanted to say. I want that to go into the RECORD.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, for five days;

To Mr. MASON, for twelve days from Friday next; and

To Mr. FULKERSON, for one day, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 65, noes 22.

So the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred, as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 16, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISTRICT LIQUOR LICENSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 13, 1882, information respecting retail liquor licenses, &c., which, on motion of Mr. HARRIS, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) making a further appropriation to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 3, after the words "one hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read "$150,000;" and after the word "tributaries," at the close of the resolution, to add the following:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such part thereof as he may deem advisable for labor only in strengthening the levees where there is immediate danger of breaks of the Mississippi River, at points in his discretion, but he shall only employ persons to whom he is issuing rations on account of their destitution caused by the floods and overflow of said river and its tributaries: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall commit the United States to the improvement or maintenance of the Mississippi River levees.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the concurrence of the Senate in the first amendment, increasing the amount, but desire the non-concurrence of the Senate in the other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the first amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not desire to detain the Senate by any remarks upon the amendments further than to say that I think the latest news from the flooded districts on the Mississippi makes it probable that the action of the House in increasing the amount of the appropriation by $50,000 was wise and expedient. I therefore ask the concurrence of the Senate in that amendment, but the other amendment I think ought not to have been adopted, and I hope it will not be concurred in here. It proposes to give the Secretary of War authority to use such portion of the appropriation as in his judgment may be necessary for the purpose of hiring labor to strengthen the levees of the Mississippi where they are now threatened with crevasses.

It seems to me that the effect of such a provision would be to compel the Secretary of War to divide this fund which we appropriate into a relief fund and a levee fund. It would not be possible for him to continue the work of restoring the levees without setting apart a definite appropriation for each purpose. The result would be that at the outset he would withdraw from the prime purpose of relief a certain portion of this fund, the whole of which will be needed for the purpose of relief and for immediate use.

In the second place, the work of organizing laborers, ascertaining the place where their work should be applied, getting them together, sending officers to look after them, would of itself in the very organization for the work cost a good deal of money.

I think that work should be left in the hands of the levee commissioners of the several States which are now threatened; and I may be permitted to say that I think the Government of the United States should not pay for such work. Those people are now threatened with an overflow; some of them are already suffering from it. The Government is appropriating a quarter of a million dollars for their relief, and it seems to me that those who are thus threatened with disaster ought to contribute their own work without compensation from the Treasury of the United States to keep the flood out of their own houses.

There are other objections which might be urged, but I think these will be sufficient. The whole of this money is needed for this relief; therefore, I think it ought not to be divided into a levee fund; and certainly we are not asking too much if we ask the State authorities there to furnish the labor that may be needed to prevent breaks.

Mr. HAMPTON. I quite agree with the Senator from Indiana in the views which he has expressed. I think that the news from the overflowed district is so disastrous that it is proper to make an additional appropriation, and I do not think this money should be applied in any other way than for the relief of the sufferers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the first amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the second amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

RESTORATIONS TO THE NAVY.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I present a most interesting memorial from three hundred officers of the Navy, line and staff, of all ranks from rear-admiral down, respectfully protesting to Congress against the restoration of officers of the Navy to the active list who have been dismissed by sentence of court-martial for drunkenness, or forcibly retired, or who have resigned to escape such sentence. The memorial is very short; it is most respectably signed, and relates to the highest interests of the Navy and so of the country. I depart from my uniform custom and ask to have it read, and I beg the attention of Senators while it is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island, will be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Petition of naval officers of all grades against the restoration of officers of the Navy who have been dismissed or retired for drunkenness, or who have resigned to escape courts-martial.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress:

The undersigned, commissioned officers of the United States Navy, most respectfully represent that the now frequent restoration of officers resigned, retired, and dismissed by court-martial is working infinite prejudice to the Navy, both by removing the wholesome fear of discipline and by discouraging the meritorious who have earned expected promotion for continuous efficiency and good conduct.

Drunkenness is the most common cause of dismissal. To restore an officer to active service and former rank who has been dismissed for this vice destructive to his power for good is to imperil human life, that is sufficiently exposed to peril by battle, storm, and shipwreck, under the coolest and wisest management. Reform, however specious its appearance on shore, under the restraining influences of family, friends, and hopes of restoration through personal solicitation, proves generally delusive at sea, under the peculiar temptations of alternate monotony and fierce excitement in a naval career. The good-fellowship of mess life has seductive influences that peculiarly strain a weak character and shatter the fairest shore-promises of amendment. Probably every member of your honorable body would shun the railway or the steamboat line where the practice of restoring to rank and service officers once discharged for drunkenness should be tolerated for an hour. The peril to human life and national reputation by restoring a reformed drunkard to command is infinitely greater on a ship of war.

In view of the great detriment done to the Naval service by restoring officers once deliberately discharged or forcibly retired for causes militating with discipline, and of the grave injury to meritorious men who see a near promotion vanish away, that incompetency may be restored and advanced at the solicitation of friends, the undersigned petition for consideration. Many of us are officers whose position cannot be affected by the restoration of those to whose restoration we thus, on public grounds, earnestly object. Others of us, equally devoted to a service to which we have given our best endeavors, and to which we are bound by the strongest ties of love and honor that exist among men, feel that an unmerited favor to one unworthy ex-officer is an undeserved injury to many who have not incurred reproach. All of us alike deplore the detriment to the discipline of the Navy in all its grades, and earnestly entreat the consideration of Congress to our petition.

If the sentiment of compassion which has already had full sway in preventing trial and mitigating punishment is to be invoked at all where the great public service is at stake, we entreat this compassion in behalf of the meritorious and the innocent whose lives and honor are at the mercy of a drunkard in command.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I need not say that I agree with every line and every word of the memorial, which sets forth in a masterly manner the danger of drunkenness in those in command in the Navy. I do not entertain rancorous or vindictive feelings toward men who are addicted to the abuse of intoxicating liquors. I regard drunkenness as oftener a disease than a vice, and I would not punish the unfortunate victim of it, who is punished enough in the personal consequences; but I have had occasion before to say that I would not place the property of the American Government, the lives of American officers and seamen, and the honor of the American flag in hands that are trembling from inebriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the names will be printed in the RECORD as well as the memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial, together with the names thereto, will be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of ex-Union soldiers remonstrating against the passage of any bill restoring Fitz-John Porter to the rolls of the Army, he having been dismissed from the service upon the judgment of a court-martial in 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of 1,500 citizens of York, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1437) for the erection of a public building at York, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented the petition of N. G. Wilson and others, citizens of Erie, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1440) for the establishment of a soldiers' home at Erie, Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented the petition of the Maimed Soldiers' Association of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 733) to grant additional pensions to those who have lost an arm or a leg in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2253) to increase the efficiency of the Signal Corps of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Philadelphia, favoring the abolition of the tax on tobacco and cigars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the resolution of Custer Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, of Etna, Pennsylvania, favoring the passage of the bill (S. No. 733) to grant additional pensions to those who have lost an arm or a leg in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the resolution of Hays Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of a bill granting arrears of pension to the widow of the late Major-General Alexander Hays; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a resolution of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, in favor of a permanent organization of the United States Signal Corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BROWN. I present the petition of a large number of citizens of the city of Columbus, Georgia, in addition to numerous petitions which I have heretofore presented from other parts of the State, praying for an adequate appropriation to improve the harbor of Savannah, Georgia. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Joint Select Committee on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress directed the Librarian some time ago to propound certain interrogatories to General Meigs on the subject of the proposed reconstruction of the Capitol building. The answer of General Meigs, together with the letter addressed to him by Mr. Spofford, by the direction of the committee, I present to the Senate and ask that they may be printed for the use of the Senate and referred to the joint select committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1057) for the relief of George Milsom, Henry Spendelow, and George W. Watson, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 113) to establish an assay office in the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1493) for the relief of Henry McGowan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1494) for the relief of Catharine Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1495) to give difference of pay to Lieutenant James S. Grubb, late of the Thirty-first Indiana Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1496) to increase the pensions of certain persons who have lost a leg and an arm, or been permanently disabled in them, in the military or naval service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1497) for the relief of Clark Mills; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. JONAS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1498) for the relief of Washington Ford; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FARLEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1499) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1500) for the relief of Eliza Howard Powers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAWYER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 51) to instruct the Postmaster-General to adopt the Gyles improved automatic car-stove fire-extinguisher on railroad cars carrying the United States mails; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CAMDEN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Hans W. Phillips and others.

On motion of Mr. ROLLINS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Abigail S. Tilton be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions, there being no adverse report thereon.

CATTLE DISEASES.

Mr. MORGAN. On the 13th of this month the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the Senate a communication covering a report from the Treasury cattle commission on the lung plague of cattle. It appears to be a very valuable document, one that I think should be largely circulated. I therefore offer a resolution for printing the report. I suppose in the ordinary course of business it would go to the Committee on Printing, but perhaps the Senate will allow the resolution to be considered without a reference.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 3,000 copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury dated the 13th of February, 1882, communicating the report of the Treasury cattle commission on the lung plague of cattle, be printed with paper cover for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution, unless the Committee on Printing wish to have it referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be contrary to law.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing may have no objection to the resolution, but the statute requires that it shall go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORGAN. I will not ask to suspend the statute for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PREFERENCE OF DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas the following provision of law, purporting to have been enacted in 1865, is contained in section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to wit: "Persons honorably discharged from the military and naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices:" Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into and report to this body—

First. Whether said section is in full force and effect or whether it has been in any manner repealed, modified, or rendered nugatory and void.

Second. Whether said section has been faithfully executed in appointments to civil offices under the Government, or whether it has been openly and habitually disregarded and violated.

Third. Whether the terms and meaning of said section apply to provost and deputy provost marshals, quartermasters, and sutlers who were not disabled in the military or naval service of the United States, or whether they apply solely to persons who have been honorably discharged from such service by reason of disability arising from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty.

Fourth. Whether any additional legislation is necessary to cause the provisions of this law to be carried out and enforced by the various Departments of this Government.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I withhold objection. Is it the purpose of the Senator from Indiana to have the resolution debated at this time?

Mr. VOORHEES. If anybody wants to debate it, I am ready.

Mr. HOAR. I think I should object to taking up a resolution for debate to displace the Anthony rule. I have no objection to the passage of the resolution now, and I have no objection to taking it up for debate, in accordance with the usual courtesy of the Senate, at the close of the morning business, if the Senator from Indiana wishes to speak on it.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Massachusetts mistakes my purpose at this time. My purpose is to get action on the resolution without saying a word myself, unless somebody else attacks the resolution. I simply desire to call the attention of one of the committees of this body to what I conceive to be an abuse. I do not want to say anything about it; I want the resolution referred to the committee in order that they may report upon the points presented; that is all. As a matter of course, if anybody wants to debate it, I shall have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection to the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the resolution be read.

The Acting Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only objection to the resolution I see is that there are more words in it than are necessary to constitute the inquiry.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will only say to the Senator from Ohio that with great propriety some more words could be used on the same subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While I am in favor of the inquiry, I suggest to the Senator from Indiana to strike out the words "purporting to have been" before "enacted." We know what the law is.

Mr. VOORHEES. The reason why I used those words, I will say to my friend from Vermont, is because of the fact that sometimes we have found in the present revision of the statutes matter that ought not to have been there. Considering the practices of this Government and the various Departments, I thought perhaps this law was one that had crept in and was disregarded because it was not binding. I thought that was possible, because it has been openly and habitually disregarded, as everybody knows. Consequently I gave the Government the benefit of a doubt, just alleging that it purported to have been so enacted. I have no doubt the law was enacted. However, if the Senator from Vermont thinks it would be better phraseology, I am perfectly willing to change the language so as to meet his criticism on that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the words will be stricken out.

Mr. VOORHEES. Just say "enacted."

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to imply that the Senate does not know whether that is the law or not. We know it is the law. Leave out the words "purporting to have been," and say "enacted."

Mr. VOORHEES. I accept the modification, after giving the reason why I put in the words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the following rule be adopted as the seventy-ninth standing rule of the Senate:

"No Senator shall be a member of more than one of the following committees, except by a special resolution of the Senate, namely: The Committees on Commerce, Naval Affairs, Military Affairs, Appropriations, Finance, Foreign Relations, Public Lands, Post-Offices and Post-Roads."

DAVID WALDO & CO.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yesterday morning, while I was detained in the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON,] from the Committee on Claims, made an adverse report on the bill (S. No. 787) for the relief of David Waldo & Co., and the bill was indefinitely postponed. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar with the report until I may have time to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the vote will be regarded as reconsidered, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, relative to the restoration of the mission to Greece, recommended in the President's message; which, together with a letter from the Secretary of State to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINDOM, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAUNDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3830) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations under the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so referred.

Mr. MAXEY. In regard to that amendment I desire to say that I reserved in committee my right to present such reasons as I saw proper against its adoption. I give notice of that fact now, so that the report shall appear not to be a unanimous report.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Anthony rule becomes absolute.

The Chair wishes to state to the Senate his interpretation of the Anthony rule in one or two respects and to intimate what will be his course of action hereafter, unless the Senate otherwise orders.

Prior to the adoption of the present Anthony rule, there having been several others heretofore, the ordinary concurrent and other resolutions received no consideration under the rule whatever, it applying to bills and joint resolutions. At the request of the Chair the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] inserted after "bills" the words "and resolutions," the Chair supposing the additional words to refer not to joint resolutions, which are in the nature of bills, and have been considered always with bills, but to the ordinary concurrent and other resolutions, which go on the Calendar under "General Orders," but are not classed with bills.

In order to give resolutions some part of the time as well as bills, the Chair will hereafter call up any resolution that has been partially debated, and then alternately, there being very few of them, unless the Senate chooses to consider the whole body of resolutions at one sitting. To-day, however, the Calendar of Bills will be proceeded with as usual.

This interpretation which the Chair has given to the rule has been denied, and that is the reason why the statement is made. The first bill on the Calendar will be announced, beginning at the point reached when last under consideration.

THE PHILADELPHIA MINT.

The bill (S. No. 813) appropriating ground in the city of Philadelphia for public purposes was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BAYARD. That bill was reported by me from the Committee on Finance. I think it had better go over so as not to lose its place upon the Calendar. Let it be passed by without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

HULL AND BOILER INSPECTORS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. FERRY. Day before yesterday the bill (S. No. 843) amending section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the several districts of the United States, was laid aside temporarily, because there was no report here from the Department. I have the report now, and I ask that the bill be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be called.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FERRY. I will state that by the title it would appear that the bill affects all the districts of the United States. It is a misprint of the title. The bill is simply confined to the districts of Michigan and Superior, in the State of Michigan, increasing the pay of these inspectors from $900 to $1,500, they doing more business than is done in the city of Detroit, where the inspectors are paid $2,000. The bill is recommended by the Department, and was reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill amending section 4414 of the Revised Statutes fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the districts of Michigan and Superior, within the State of Michigan.

RETURN OF DRAFTS.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, That a copy of said draft, with all the indorsements and protests, if any, thereon, shall be retained by the Secretary of State;

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to deliver to the person justly entitled to the possession thereof one draft for the sum of $8,950, dated New York, August 2, 1859, and drawn by Santiago Vidauri, governor of Nuevo-Leon and Cohahuila, by Ignacio Gulinda, agent, on J. M. Mata, Mexican minister, Washington, District of Columbia, and accepted by said J. M. Mata and made payable at the Bank of the Republic, New York, and all other papers relating to said draft, the same having been deposited in the Department by error: Provided, That a copy of said draft, with all the indorsements and protests, if any, thereon, shall be retained by the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLA CARROLL.

The bill (S. No. 997) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long, was announced as being the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] would explain it if he were here. It has been reported twice from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARLAND. The same bill was passed by the Senate at the last session.

Mr. HOAR. What is it about? I have great respect for that committee, but they are not the Senate, and I think a grant of the property of the United States should at least be explained as matter of sound precedent.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be passed over for a moment until the Senator from Vermont comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The bill for the relief of Ella Carroll has been read, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] desired an explanation of it. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the matter.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 997) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long. By the bill all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the real estate in the city of Washington, known and designated on the public plat or plan of the city as lot numbered 3, in square numbered 530, will be granted and conveyed to Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long, illegitimate child of Daniel Long, deceased, her heirs and assigns forever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The explanation that I make for the Committee on the Judiciary is that this is to release by the United States the escheated title that the United States has got from the death of the brother of this lady, also an illegitimate child of Daniel Long, dying without issue, and it is in order to enable her to inherit in fact from this illegitimate brother of hers. Their father in his life-time undertook to make provision for these two children and did it by a conveyance to her brother, now dead, for their common benefit. The brother dying without a widow and without any issue, has no heirs by law, and the title technically has escheated to the United States. The committee reported the bill once or twice before at former sessions and it has always passed unanimously. That is the simple fact about it. The other children of this Mr. Long, his legitimate children, were provided for.

Mr. HOAR. I remember the case now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that it appeared to the committee that it was the simplest act of justice on the part of the United States not to let this technical title of ours stand in the way of this lady's taking this property that her father designed that she and her brother should have.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO SCHOOL LANDS.

The bill (S. No. 25) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, found to be mineral land, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-six sections, found to be mineral lands, and to secure to the State of Colorado the benefit of the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts."

HELEN M. SCHOLEFIELD.

The bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Helen M. Scholefield, administratrix of the estate of C. M. Scholefield, deceased, late an additional paymaster in the Army, of $544.32, being the amount due to him on the final settlement of his accounts, after deducting from the amount charged to him the sum of $10,000 which stands to his debit on the authority of an alleged voucher for that amount presented by Major J. Ledyard Hodge, late paymaster, and bearing date August 10, 1864, the validity of which voucher the Government has failed to establish in a suit brought and finally determined in the United States district court at Utica, New York, in April, 1876, for the settlement of the accounts of Major C. M. Scholefield, as such additional paymaster, with the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Acting Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAIR on the 27th of January last:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report, viz:

A bill of similar import was presented to the Forty-sixth Congress and was favorably reported both by the Senate and House, but was not reached for final action.

Mr. Crowley, who reported it in the House, was United States district attorney for the northern district of New York, having charge of the case for the Government, as stated in the petition, and so had personal knowledge of the truth and correctness of his report, (Report No. 888,) which was as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 428) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield, administratrix of the estate of Major C. M. Scholefield, deceased, late an additional paymaster of the Army, respectfully report:

"That prior to July 11, 1863, and until October 3, 1865, Major Charles M. Scholefield (then residing in Whitestown, New York) was an acting additional paymaster of the Army of the United States, duly appointed and qualified as such and having duly filed bonds therefor.

"That between the above dates said Scholefield, as such paymaster, received and paid out large sums of money, rendering regular statements and balances thereof and filed vouchers therefor, and on the 3d day of October, 1865, having rendered a final statement of his accounts with the Government and paid over all the funds appearing charged to him, was honorably discharged.

"That between the dates aforesaid one J. Ledyard Hodge was an additional paymaster at Washington, and in 1867, being involved with charges of defalcation, made returns and vouchers, among which appeared one of $10,000 as an advance of that sum to said Major Charles M. Scholefield, August 10, 1864, and which he had never before that date reported, and which the report of Major Scholefield did not show as received by him. The Department thereupon charged the said voucher in the sum of $10,000 to the account of and against Scholefield.

"In 1868 said J. Ledyard Hodge, upon an indictment for defalcations to a large amount, was tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary. It does not appear that Major C. M. Scholefield was advised of this $10,000 claim so made and charged to his account.

"Major Charles M. Scholefield died November 21, 1869.

"At the Fortieth Congress, March 16, 1868, an act was passed providing as follows:

"'That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized, in the settlement of accounts of paymasters of the Army, to allow such credits for overpayments made in good faith on public account since the commencement of the rebellion and prior to the passage of this act as shall appear to them to be just by such vouchers and testimony as they shall require.'

"In pursuance of this act the accounting officers of the Treasury prepared, in December, 1871, a statement of the deficiencies and overpayments of the accounts of Major C. M. Scholefield, as they appeared by the vouchers filed, and which statement (omitting the aforesaid item of $10,000) showed that he had in good faith overpaid the Government in the sum of $544.32, but by charging the $10,000 item to his account Major Scholefield appeared owing the Government the difference, namely, the sum of $9,455.68.

"In 1872 the Government made claim upon the sureties of the bond of Major Scholefield for this sum of $9,455.68, which led to an investigation by said sureties, who thereupon claimed the $10,000 voucher, so far as to Major Scholefield's signature thereto, was a forgery. Thereafter an action was commenced in the United States court for the northern district of New York by the Government against the sureties to recover the balance of $9,455.68 appearing unpaid, and which action was, on the 19th day of March, 1874, tried before Judge Smalley and a jury, resulting in a verdict for the defendants, the only question being as to the signature of Major Scholefield to the $10,000 voucher and as to whether the same was a forgery or not.

"An appeal was taken by the Government and a new trial thereupon ordered, which was had in April, 1876, before Judge Wallace and a jury, with the same result as the first trial, and the issue being the same. From this second verdict the Government has never appealed, which results in a final decision that the $10,000 voucher so reported by Hodge and charged to Scholefield and now so appearing upon the books of the proper officers of the Treasury was a forgery and void, leaving properly upon such adjustment to the credit of said Major C. M. Scholefield by reason of such overpayments, as before stated, the sum of $544.32, and for the payment of which sum to the estate of said Scholefield this bill is introduced.

"The $10,000 item having been charged to the account of said Scholefield, although judicially declared a forgery and void, the Department does not feel authorized to cancel and reconsider the same except upon the direction of Congress. Wherefore your committee report back said bill and recommend its passage."

Your committee adopt the statement of facts contained in the above report and the deductions made therefrom, and therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 936) to establish an educational fund, and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

Mr. MORRILL. There will not be time this morning to consider this bill, and I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PEORIA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 238) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Peoria, in the State of Illinois; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to insert after the word "money," in line 2 of section 2, the words "in the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask unanimous consent that three or four bills for public buildings at capitals of States shall be passed now. They will take but a moment's time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont, on behalf of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, asks that the bills in relation to public buildings at State capitals shall be considered now.

Mr. MORRILL. One for Kentucky, one for Colorado, and one for Missouri.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not live in a State capital, but I live in a better town than nine-tenths of the capitals of States, and there is a bill in which Terre Haute is largely interested that can soon be reached; and so, though I would like to oblige the capitals of sovereign States, I must call for the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. I will not press the matter without universal consent.

USE OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

The bill (S. No. 789) to regulate the use of the Capitol grounds was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been informed that there is no law by which the police court here can punish the various offenses named in this bill. Constant damage is committed on the Capitol, pieces of the bronze doors are stolen, ink is strewed from the bottom to the top of stairs, plants are stolen from the grounds in large numbers, shrubs and trees are injured. There is no power on the part of the judge of the police court to inflict any penalty, as he understands the law. These rules and regulations have been very carefully prepared, submitted to competent judicial authority, and I believe there can be no objection to giving the police court some chance to prevent the constant mutilation of the Capitol and of the trees and shrubs and grounds around about it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

THE GENEVA AWARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 44) re-establishing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. GARLAND. That cannot be considered under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER.

The bill (S. No. 24) for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM L. WHITE.

The bill (S. No. 146) for the relief of William L. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, after the word "thereof," in line 7, to strike out "at such rate for said services as to said Secretary shall be deemed reasonable, and to pay the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and to insert in lieu thereof "to the amount of $1,333.33⅓, the balance due on said contract; and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized to pay the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and allow the claim of William L. White for actual services performed by him as a clerk in the land office at Oregon City, Oregon, under contract with the register and the receiver thereof, to the amount of $1,333.33⅓, the balance due on said contract; and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized to pay the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1015) for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

Mr. COCKRELL. That never has come from the Committee on Military Affairs with my knowledge, and I move that it be committed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. That bill never came from that committee.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. GROVER] is not here, and perhaps it would be better to pass over the bill without prejudice till he comes in.

Mr. COCKRELL. We cannot pass a bill of that kind without a reference.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suggested that it be passed over without prejudice until the Senator from Oregon comes in.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think it had better go to the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I object to its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over, as the Senator from Oregon is not here.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from Oregon is not here; and the bill has never been to a committee. The Senator may wish to submit some remarks to the Senate upon it.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be passed over.

Mr. SLATER. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the order.

Mr. COCKRELL. All I have to say about it is that that bill in that shape never passed the Military Committee when I was present unless I was out of my mind.

Mr. McMILLAN. It does not purport to have come from that committee at all, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears to have come from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN. It never has been referred.

Mr. TELLER. I have objected, and that ought to end discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It certainly ought to have ended discussion. The next case will be called.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 28) to create an additional land district in the State of Colorado.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I request that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from Colorado. The next three bills on the Calendar were all introduced by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. GROVER,] being Senate bills numbered 1027, 1028, and 1029, which have been read the first time each, and on which the Senator from Oregon desired to make some remarks. The Chair supposes these bills ought to be passed over. ["Certainly."] They will be passed over.

JOHN M. M'CLINTOCK.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 672) for the relief of John M. McClintock; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to reopen and reconsider the claim of John M. McClintock for the refunding of certain taxes alleged to have been improperly and illegally assessed and collected to the amount of $3,600; and if upon reopening and reconsidering the claim the Commissioner shall find these taxes or any part of them to have been illegally or improperly assessed and collected, it is made his duty to audit and ascertain the amount of taxes so illegally and improperly collected from the claimant, deducting, however, any legal unpaid taxes which the claimant should have paid and did not, if any there shall be, under section 103 of the act of June 30, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TERRE HAUTE.

The bill (S. No. 62) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the post-office and Government offices at the city of Terre Haute, Indiana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask to have a letter on the subject of the bill just passed inserted in the RECORD, as explanatory.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 30, 1882.

SIR: I am in receipt from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of your letter of this date, and, as requested therein, have the honor to submit herewith a copy of a letter of February 15, 1881, from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the Secretary of the Treasury regarding the necessity for a Government building at Terre Haute, Indiana.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, February 15, 1881.

SIR: I have received a letter from Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, United States Senate, making inquiry in regard to the needs of the internal-revenue service at Terre Haute, Indiana, for a suitable public building for the transaction of business at that point.

In reply I will state that the collection district is composed of fifteen counties, and it would seem probable that the district would be maintained as long as the internal-revenue system of taxation is continued.

The collections of said district have been large for a number of years, and for the last fiscal year amounted to $1,531,283. Including the collector there is a force of thirteen persons required in the office for the transaction of the public business. On the 1st of February of this year the collector was charged on the books of this office with $1,080,473 of internal-revenue stamps, and usually keeps that amount on hand.

The office is now located in an ordinary brick building, not intended to be fireproof. While the stamps and other valuables are kept in a vault and safe in said office, the great bulk of the records and files of the office are in ordinary wooden file cases, subject to be destroyed in the event of a fire.

The rent now paid for the use of said office is $900 per annum.

Terre Haute is a growing city of, say, 30,000 inhabitants. The post-office service must certainly require a very considerable amount of house room. If a post-office and an internal-revenue office could be combined in one fire-proof building of suitable size and planned and erected with an eye to economy it would in my opinion be a judicious expenditure.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary of the Treasury.

HENRY O. WAGGONER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider one bill we have almost reached. It will only take five minutes, and to-morrow I shall not be present. It is Senate bill No. 90.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the

Anthony rule for five minutes, at the request of the Senator from Colorado, to take up Senate bill No 90? ["No objection."]

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 90) to pay the creditors of the late Henry O. Waggoner, late consular clerk at Lyons, France. It appropriates $545.50 to be applied by the United States consul at Lyons, France, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to the payment of the expenses occasioned by the sickness, death, and funeral expenses of Henry O. Waggoner, late consular clerk at Lyons, France.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] asks leave informally to lay aside the unfinished business with a view to take up a bill introduced by him on which he wishes to submit some remarks.

Mr. LOGAN. It is Senate bill No. 850.

Mr. BAYARD. The unfinished business is the tariff-commission bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The tariff-commission bill is the unfinished business, and it is proposed to lay it aside informally.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to lay aside informally the pending order in order to take up the Post-Office appropriation bill with the understanding that when taken up for consideration I will yield to the Senator from Illinois. That is an arrangement satisfactory to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks consent to take up the appropriation bill named by him with a view to lay it aside to allow the Senator from Illinois to make his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

WILLIAM ORNDORFF.

Mr. GROOME. On Tuesday last, by direction of the Committee on Pensions, I presented an unfavorable report upon the bill (S. No. 1283) granting a pension to William Orndorff, and the bill was indefinitely postponed. Since then the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] who introduced the bill has received some papers which he thinks have an important bearing upon the case, and at his request I ask that the action of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill may be reconsidered and that the bill may be placed, with the unfavorable report, upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

MASSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 5221) to amend section 3066 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the relief of Susan Marshall Massie; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 130) for the relief of Paulina Jones, widow of Alexander Jones, deceased, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Infantry;

An act (S. No. 143) for the relief of Charles Collins;

An act (S. No. 242) for the relief of S. Rosenfeld & Co.;

An act (S. No. 271) for the relief of Frank D. Yates and others;

An act (S. No. 494) directing the issue of a duplicate check to William J. Anthony, a pensioner of the United States; and

An act (S. No. 788) granting a pension to Olive Stephenson.

INTERNAL-REVENUE EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Secretary to read the bill that I desire to discuss.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has had one reading. It will now have the second.

The bill (S. No. 850) to appropriate and expend the entire income derived from the internal-revenue taxes on the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits for the education of all the children living in the United States was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act the entire income derived from the internal-revenue taxes on the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits shall be appropriated and expended for the education of all the children living in the United States.

SEC. 2. That the money so received shall be expended pro rata in the several States and Territories, as shown by the census of 1880 and each succeeding census.

SEC. 3. That the education hereby contemplated shall include such instruction as is provided in the curriculum of the public schools of the country, and also the establishment and maintenance of normal schools, teachers' institutes, and instruction in the industrial and mechanical arts.

SEC. 4. That any State or Territory, before receiving the benefits of this act, shall be required, by local enactment, to make obligatory upon all children between the ages of seven and twelve years school attendance for at least six months in each year.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is charged with the proper administration of this law, through the Commissioner of Education; and they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations to carry this law into effect.

SEC. 6. That no part of this fund shall be used for the erection of school-houses or buildings of any kind for school purposes.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, fully aware that this bill contemplates the diversion of a large amount of the Government revenues into a new channel, and is, on this account at least, an important one, deserving the careful consideration of Congress, it is my intention to discuss it somewhat thoroughly, and, if possible, to present to the Senate valid reasons why it should become a law. Let us, therefore, first examine the bill carefully in order that we may understand clearly its provisions. These are simple and, so far as the wording is concerned, easily understood. The first section provides that from and after the passage of the act the entire income derived from the internal-revenue taxes on the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits shall be appropriated and expended for the education of all the children living in the United States. The second section provides for the method of distributing this revenue, as follows: that the money so received shall be distributed to the several States and Territories according to the population as shown by the census of 1880, and each succeeding census, for the purpose of being duly applied by such States and Territories solely to the purposes of education, as in this bill provided for.

The third section defines and explains what is to be understood by the term education as used in the first section, thus: that the education hereby contemplated shall include such instruction as is provided in the curriculum of the public schools of the country, that is in the several States and Territories, and also the establishment and maintenance of normal schools, teachers' institutes, and instruction in the industrial and mechanical arts.

Section 4 provides for the necessary steps to be taken by the several States and Territories in order that they may be entitled to the benefit of this act, as follows: that any State or Territory before receiving the benefits of this act, shall be required by local enactment, to make obligatory upon all children (of such State or Territory) between the ages of seven and twelve years, school attendance for at least six months in each year.

Section 5 designates the department and officers charged with the administration of the law and the establishing of the rules and regulations necessary, &c., thus: that the Secretary of the Interior is charged with the proper administration of this law, through the Commissioner of Education, and these two officers are authorized and directed, the President of the United States approving, to make all proper rules and regulations necessary to carrying this law into effect.

The sixth and last section is simply a prohibitory provision to prevent any part of this fund from being used for the purpose of erecting school-houses or other buildings of any kind for school purposes.

The bill, therefore, is a very simple one, and although the object contemplated is one of great importance on account not only of the amount involved but also of what is expected to be accomplished thereby and the great vital subject it touches—the intellectual advancement of our people—yet so far as the latter is concerned it is easily understood and readily comprehended; in a word, it simply proposes to turn over to the several States and Territories, to be used only and exclusively for the education of all the children thereof, the revenue derived from the tax on the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits, amounting in the aggregate, under the present rate of taxation, to about sixty million dollars annually.

The proposition thus to divert from its usual course such a large portion of our revenue when first presented, I admit, is somewhat startling; and it is for this very reason I desire that in the opening of my remarks it may be brought in its full force to the consideration of every Senator present, for I am fully aware that in this fact will be found the chief objection in the minds of those who, without a thorough examination of the question in all its bearings, may be inclined to oppose the bill. I am also fully conscious of the fact that this will be a kind of prima facie objection in the minds of many that must be overcome with strong and cogent reasons.

Having briefly stated the provisions of the bill as they appear on its face, let us examine them more carefully by tracing out in detail their operations and probable effect, after which we will be better able to discuss their expediency.

The amount of revenue received from the taxes on the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits for each fiscal year from 1875 to the end of 1880, during which time the rate has remained unchanged, is shown in this table taken from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year 1881:

Receipts from distilled spirits, 1881.

Year.	Receipts.
1875	$52,081,991 12
1876	56,426,365 13
1877	57,469,429 72
1878	50,420,815 80
1879	52,570,284 69
1880	61,185,508 70
1881	67,153,974 88

This gives a total for the year 1881 of $67,153,974, and a yearly average for the seven years of $56,758,338.59.

If the bill now before the Senate becomes a law it will have the effect, as heretofore remarked, of distributing to the States and Territories, according to the population as shown by the census returns, about $60,000,000 annually of the national revenue, to be expended by them in educating the children of the country, provided the tax on and production of distilled spirits remains substantially the same as at present.

The reasons for distributing this fund to the States and Territories, and having them expend it in educating the children, are doubtless apparent to every one. In most, if not all, of these there are already systems of free schools and organized plans of education, aided and fostered by the State, and also the appliances and corps of officers necessary to carry on this work. For the General Government to attempt to inaugurate and operate a separate national system of education would, as a matter of course, not only entail upon the people an unnecessary expense but would bring the national and State authorities into constant conflict. In other words it is impossible to carry on in the same territory two distinct and different systems of public schools for the same children.

The bill presented seeks therefore to avoid this very serious objection by distributing the fund to the States and Territories, and allowing them to apply it to the purpose intended, the distribution to be pro rata according to population.

The principal reason for selecting the total population as given by the census returns as the guide in making the distribution, instead of the number of children of a prescribed age, was on account of the greater accuracy of this enumeration. Another reason is that it is the only reliable enumeration that is made under Federal authority.

If an exact or thoroughly reliable enumeration of the children between the ages fixed in the bill could be obtained year by year this would be a preferable guide in the distribution, as it would give a slightly larger proportion to the rural districts and the sections most needing such assistance. For example, it has been found, in enumerating the children in France between the ages of six and thirteen, that the proportion in the rural districts (communes of less than two thousand inhabitants) is a little higher than in cities, (communes of more than two thousand inhabitants.) In the former the average number out of every hundred inhabitants was found to be 12.67, and in some cases even as high as 15.72, while in the latter it was only 11.53. I presume this would also be found true to a certain extent in this country if we had the data necessary for the comparison.

The bill further requires that a State or Territory, in order to be entitled to the benefits of its provisions, must inaugurate and keep in existence an organized public-school system, open to all children thereof of the prescribed age, and must also provide for enforced attendance at least six months in the year. As it will be necessary for some competent authority of the General Government to decide whether or not a State or Territory is entitled to the benefit of the bill, this is left to the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Education, subject to the approval of the President.

These provisions, as will be admitted, I presume, by all, are necessary, in order that the funds so distributed shall be properly applied to the purposes for which they are granted. Another object in view in introducing them is to bring about, as soon as possible, a uniformity in the school systems throughout the entire country. In defining the term "education" as used in the bill, it will be seen that I have included not only the usual curriculum of instruction in public schools but also that of normal schools and teachers' institutes. The advantages of, and I may say necessity for, normal schools are now so well understood and so generally admitted that it is hardly necessary for me to say anything on this point; still a few words in reference to them may not be amiss.

As an evidence of the felt necessity throughout the country for their establishment and maintenance I have only to mention the fact, as shown by the last report of the Commissioner of Education, (page 77,) that schools of this kind have been established in all of the States except Delaware, Florida, and Nevada, eighty of which are supported in part or whole by the States and thirteen by cities. How the opposition to these schools which has manifested itself in a variety of attacks, open and covert, has been received by the body of the people is shown by the returns to the office of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1879, from which it appears that the number of these institutions and the students attending them are about four times what they were in 1870, and that the increase in 1879 over 1878 was fifty-one schools.

A proposition was introduced in the New York Legislature in 1878 to abandon the State normal schools, which resulted in appointing a committee to investigate the subject. The report of this committee, transmitted to the Legislature May 19, 1879, presents (report of Commissioner of Education, 1879, page 79) the following conclusions:

1. That the normal schools are performing intelligently, efficiently, and in good faith the work expected of them by the State.
2. That the normal schools are an essential part of our public-school system, and as such should be liberally and unwaveringly supported.
3. That without normal schools there would be that waste in public expenditures which must result from the employment of unskilled and incompetent teachers; and hence that true economy requires their maintenance.
4. That normal schools should have a settled place in the permanent policy of the State, and that henceforth the only question should be, How can they be improved and extended?

It was well said by an experienced Michigan superintendent of schools that if he were to undertake the education of the children of the State as an individual enterprise, with the school fund as the fixed price, he would use a tenth of the fund to train a body of competent teachers, and with the other nine-tenths as wages would accomplish more than the whole would do as then used in the payment of unprepared instructors. (Report of Commissioner of Education, 1879, p. 80.)

In order to become efficient as an instructor in any profession or art it is absolutely necessary that the person should first pass through a course of instruction that will prepare him or her therefor, and this is as true of the teacher's as of any other profession.

For similar reasons the bill includes also instruction in the industrial and mechanical arts. I confess agricultural schools have so far failed to meet fully the expectations of those who have advocated and supported them, but this has arisen chiefly from three causes: first, the want of properly prepared and experienced teachers; second, the want of adequate support; and, third, a kind of inherent prejudice against "scientific farming." That it is possible by properly conducted institutions of this kind to render instruction in the various agricultural and industrial branches advantageous to a nation is proven by what has been accomplished in Europe. Germany has at present over one hundred and fifty schools of agriculture, horticulture, arboriculture, vine culture, and meadow culture, each of which has its farms, gardens, &c., attached. (Report of Commissioner of Education, page 133.)

Prussia alone had, in 1876, 6 higher agricultural academies, 46 agricultural schools, 29 schools of arboriculture and vine culture, and 6 schools of forestry. Even in Finland, which is ever associated in our minds with the land of the Esquimaux, they have both higher and lower grades of agricultural institutions; and even schools for instruction in the manufacture of butter and cheese, one of the chief industries of the country, are maintained. (Report of Commissioner of Education, page 132.)

While our soil was new and possessed its virgin productiveness, labor only, with but little knowledge of science or art, was all that was needed to insure a bountiful harvest. But that condition is fast disappearing, and the demand made upon the soil in the meantime is rapidly increasing. The supply of meat, fuel, and lumber are great questions, which will be pressing heavily not only on the minds of the people but of our legislators in another generation.

To meet these and other important kindred questions it is our duty to begin now to train a corps of active minds to aid our agriculturists in meeting these demands. In other words, agriculture and the cognate branches of industry must be placed upon scientific bases and made to take their position side by side with the most elevated professions. Some signs of a movement in this direction are beginning to be seen already in certain sections of the country. Let the nation and States foster and aid it.

Thus, as will be seen, it is the object of this bill to carry this stimulus of education into every avenue of industrial life, from the daily duties of the good housewife and her farmer husband to those of the architects who plan the magnificent structures that adorn this and other cities.

As an evidence of the influence our system of education is having on the industrial classes which English writers have not been slow to observe, I requote the following, from a somewhat remakable article on education in the United States, in the Westminster Review, as far back as 1853; it is taken from the thirty-second annual report of the controllers of public schools in Philadelphia, and gives the different occupations of 1,467 pupils after leaving school, (Westminster Review, 1853, page 572:)

The reviewer then proceeds to comment upon this, as follows:

The whole importance of such results it is hardly possible to measure; but that they will produce an unparalleled elevation in the working classes of Philadelphia it is easy to conceive. One hundred and eighty well-educated youth annually sent forth, almost all of them to gain their livelihood by the various industrial occupations, and set to those around them the example of the tastes and habits which may be expected from high mental culture, is a phenomenon of rare importance which is well worthy of our serious reflection. To us it is of the highest concern, as showing the possibility of achieving the high educational training of workingmen without separating them from their class, and as demonstrating to those who may be doubtful about it the practicability of usefully combining tastes which distinguish intellectual culture with the supposed drudgery of mechanical toil.

Since 1850, the last year included in this report, our advance in this respect has been great, and furnishes an explanation of the rapid strides we have made in the mechanical and industrial arts. One object therefore of this bill is to carry this elevating influence into every department of industrial life, and to bring them all up to the highest possible standard of excellency.

In order to comprehend fully the scope of the bill and its probable effect, if it becomes a law, it is necessary for us now to glance at the public-school system as at present organized and operated in the different States.

To aid us in this respect I present a table kindly prepared and furnished me by the Commissioner of Education, giving the statistics for the year 1880 from all the States, (the Territories are not included except in aggregate:)

[1] The school population includes all persons of legal school age—usually those between five or six and twenty or twenty-one. Any wide variation from these years will be noted.

[2] The numbers in this column marked with a star (*) are returns to the office. The others represent the proportion of the school population which would be of ages between six and sixteen were there an equal number of children of each age. Probably these figures are about 3 per cent. too small.

[3] The agricultural college statistics were mostly obtained from letters received during 1880.

[4] For all schools in the State systems.

[a] School age, 5–17. [b] In the State University. [c] School age, 4–16. [d] School age, 6–18. [e] School age, 5–18. [f] School age, 5–15. [g] School age, 6–16. [h] School age, 8–14.

Referring for the present to the totals only we find them to be as follows:

School population	15,170,963
Estimated population between 6 and 16 years	10,540,330
Enrollment in public schools in 1880	9,706,842
Number of normal students	18,271
Students in agricultural colleges	5,212
State normal appropriations in 1880	$638,267
School income, 1880	$83,161,446
School expenditure, 1880	$79,874,966
Income of agricultural colleges	$622,068

The following are the aggregate returns for the Territories for the year 1879:

School population	136,146
Enrollment	80,310
School income	$872,622
School expenditures	$864,323

From this showing it appears that the whole expenditure for school purposes in 1880 was about eighty-one million dollars, and the whole income about eighty-four millions. The average annual expenditure per scholar enrolled was about eight dollars and twenty-five cents.

But in order to understand fully the force and bearing of these figures it is necessary for us to look below the surface showing and examine a few at least of the items. If we compare the enrollment and expenditure in the different States we shall find the amount expended per annum for each scholar varying very widely. As an illustration I mention the following, which show perhaps the widest differences:

California	$18 06
Massachusetts	16 86
Connecticut	11 76
Illinois	10 70
Iowa	13 20
West Virginia	5 02
Georgia	1 99
Arkansas	3 35
Alabama	2 09

Taking the data I have presented and the population as shown by the census returns, let us now try and make an approximation of what is necessary in order to give to all the children of the United States an adequate common-school education.

Taking my own State, (Illinois,) where the school age is from six to twenty-one, I find the number of children between these ages to be 32.8 per cent. of the whole population. Using this percentage as a basis, it gives us 16,451,064, or, in round numbers, sixteen and a half millions as the school population of the entire country. Allowing an expenditure of $10 for each scholar, we find that it will require $165,000,000 per annum to give all the children of the country a suitable common-school education. Of this sum, as we have already seen, about eighty-one millions are expended by the States and Territories under the present system. Add the sixty millions proposed to be devoted to this purpose by this bill, and we have a total of one hundred and forty-one millions, which still falls short of the sum estimated some twenty-four millions. But as the enrollment will never equal the total school population, and as a large portion will have accomplished their course before reaching twenty-one years of age, the joint amount of these two funds will about meet the real want for some years to come.

Or, suppose we form an estimate in another way, thus: the entire school population as given by the Commissioner in the table presented (including that of the Territories as reported in 1879) is 15,307,109. Allowing thirty scholars to a teacher, this gives 510,236 teachers. Averaging the salary at $40 per month, (which is $3 less than the average in Maryland, and $2 less than in New York,) and allowing six months' school in the year, we obtain $122,456,640 as the amount required for teachers' wages. Add to this 20 per cent., about the average ratio of miscellaneous expenses as shown by the Commissioner's report, and we have a total in round numbers of $147,000,000. Theoretically the two funds would be added together, making the whole amount to be expended $141,000,000, but in practice the result would in all probability be somewhat different.

The States which are already taxing themselves heavily for school purposes would be very likely to lessen somewhat the burdens already imposed upon their citizens, and yet, at the same time, with the amount received augment their school fund and increase the amount and efficiency of the instruction. In these States the tendency would be to elevate their educational standard. The States which have hitherto been too weak and feeble to furnish funds sufficient to establish a thorough system of public schools, rather than lose the large fund thus granted, would at once enter upon this too long delayed work in good earnest.

Take, for example, Alabama, the first on the alphabetic list, where less than one-half of the children are enrolled in the public schools, and the amount expended on each scholar in 1880 was but $2.09; her share of the proposed distribution would be a little over $1,110,000, or about three times the amount she now expends on public instruction. Georgia's proportion would be $1,800,000, or about four times the amount she expended in 1880.

Can we doubt for a moment that such a large addition as this would encourage these States, which are now struggling to recover from their crippled condition, to enter with increased vigor upon the work of educating their children by means of a well organized common-school system?

Much more might be added in reference to the operation and effect of this bill if it should become a law, but this will suffice as an explanation. I will therefore turn to the discussion of the propriety and expediency of its passage at this time. But before doing so allow me to remark that I am not so wedded to the particular form in which it is now presented that I am unwilling to accept any amendment thought advisable that does not defeat the object intended.

Although I have, in the previous part of my argument, given an estimate of what would be the theoretical amount of funds with the addition granted by this bill, if it should become a law, which would be devoted to school purposes, yet, as I have intimated, we could not expect that this would be the practical result. In the States where the people already taxing themselves somewhat heavily for the purpose of educating their children, and where they already have in operation well organized and thorough school systems, the funds received from the General Government would be accepted as a means of relieving them somewhat from their heavy burden in this respect. The result would probably be that such States would lessen their taxes for school purposes, not to the full amount of what would be received, but to a large per cent. thereof. In Illinois, for example, where the school income for 1880 was $7,836,952, and whose proportion of the funds granted by this bill would be about $3,700,000, it is more than probable that the $1,000,000 State taxes for this purpose would, for some years at least, be omitted, and that a large number of the district finding their funds considerably increased, especially where the law for building school-houses is bearing somewhat heavily, would avail themselves of this fund as a means of lessening their taxes to support their schools. In other words, instead of the States and Territories adding the entire fund to the eighty-one millions already expended, and thus increasing the amount to one hundred and forty-one millions, the great probability, in fact we may say the certain result, would be that the larger portion, for a number of years to come, would be used as a means of relieving themselves of their present burden.

That there would be some increase probably to the amount of twelve or fifteen millions, is certain, from this fact: all the States receiving from this fund more than is now expended by them for this purpose would of necessity increase their expenditure to the amount of this excess, even should they do away entirely with taxes for school purposes. Take the following table; it will show the exact situation:

States and Territories.	Population, 1880.	State's share of $60,000,000 distributed according to population.	Total school expenditure, 1880.	Excess of State's share of $60,000,000 over expenditure.	Excess of expenditure over State's share of $60,000,000.

Estimating the whole amount of this fund at $60,000,000 and the total population of the United States at 50,000,000 persons, there would be an excess of the pro rata distribution over what is now expended in the following States, of the amounts here shown, (in round numbers:)

Alabama	$1,139,000	North Carolina	$1,327,000
Arkansas	724,000	South Carolina	870,000
Florida	168,000	Tennessee	1,125,000
Georgia	908,000	Texas	1,156,00
Kentucky	344,000	Virginia	868,000
Louisiana	648,000	West Virginia	25,000
Mississippi	526,000

Making a total excess of $9,828,000.

We see from this that, supposing the States which expend a larger sum than they would receive should lessen their taxes to the amount received, and that the States expending less should impose no taxes for school purposes, there would still be an increased expenditure for common schools of some ten million dollars.

Assuming, in order to place this question in its most unfavorable light, that the revenue now derived by the United States from all sources does not exceed that which is necessary to meet the expenses of the Government, the withdrawal of this sixty millions of its funds would necessitate the raising of this amount by imports or otherwise. But would this increase the taxes on the people of the United States to this amount? By no means; the only addition would be the amount of increase in the school expenditure of which I have just been speaking. But this is not all that can be said in favor of it, even under the most unfavorable view that can possibly be presented.

The tax paid by the people under the operation of a revenue tariff is felt as little as any other imposed upon them, while on the other hand, that for school purposes, where they are adequate for the education of the children, bears heavier on the rural districts than any other, amounting in some cases to 3 and 4 per cent. on the assessed value of their taxable property.

The effect of this bill, even on the supposition with which I am now proceeding, would be to distribute this amount of tax in such a manner that it would be felt in a far less degree than at present.

Nor could those who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of distilled spirits find in this arrangement any just cause for complaint, as it would not add one cent to the tax already imposed upon them. It would require too much time for me to enter into details to prove the correctness of these assertions, but I feel assured this will be conceded by every Senator. But the chief advantage that will be derived from this bill is that it will meet, in a more complete manner than by any other method that could be devised, the very want that gave rise to the common-school system. The inability of some parents, the neglect of others, and the unwillingness of others to educate their children, was felt, at a very early day in the history of our country, to be detrimental to its best interests, and a waste of mental force that should not be allowed by society. The attempt to remedy this began at first in small communities.

In 1635, Boston, being then but five years old, and yet in her swaddling clothes, resolved that "our brother Philemon Permout should be appointed schoolmaster, for the instruction and education of our children;" and thirty acres of land were appropriated at the same time for his support. (Westminster Review, 1853, page 499.) Thus was the first seed sown that has developed into the magnificent system of education in our country that is the admiration of the civilized world. But this primary plan only embraced communities; so that while some were advancing others were making but little progress; it was not lifting up the whole mass.

It was not until about 1835 that a new era dawned in this respect. At this time, the public mind becoming aware of the alarming amount of illiteracy in the States, a movement was begun, in which I believe Horace Mann was the leading spirit, to remedy the evil. This resulted in the adoption of the present common-school system, which has wrought such marvelous changes in many of our States. But the rapid advance in the means of intercourse and intercommunication has effected such vast changes in our social relations that the people of the several States and Territories are brought into more intimate relation with each other than the different sections of the larger States were half a century ago.

What, therefore, was true of the effect of illiteracy in parts of a State upon the general welfare of the Commonwealth is now true in regard to the nation as a whole. As it was thus found necessary to provide a system of education applying alike to the whole population of a State, so now we have reached a period when it becomes necessary if we would meet the demands of the age to provide means for extending this system in its most advanced form over the whole country.

That this can only be done by some action of the General Government must be conceded by all who study the subject with any care. Laws without means of carrying them into effect will undoubtedly remain as dead letters upon our statute-books. The bill presented is intended to meet this want, and if it becomes a law will, as I believe, do so. While it may have but little effect in increasing activity in this direction in those States already in the front rank in educational progress, it will undoubtedly have the effect of bringing rapidly forward those which are lagging behind in this great work. Who can estimate the beneficial change that will be made in the educational status in Alabama in the course of fifteen or twenty years by devoting a million and a half of dollars to this purpose where now but $375,000 are expended; or that of North Carolina with one and three-quarter millions where now but $352,000 are expended? The folly of waiting with the hope that time will induce or enable these States to put forth the energy necessary to give a proper education to their children is illustrated by the one last mentioned. One of the original thirteen, yet in 1880, with property of an assessed value of $143,000,000, its expenditure for school purposes was but $352,882; while Nebraska, with an assessed value of but little over ninety millions, expended for the same year $1,137,995; and West Virginia, with an assessed value of one hundred and twenty-eight and a half millions, expended $716,864. On the other hand, again, we see Georgia, another of the original thirteen, with an assessed value in 1880 of $229,000,000, expended but $471,029 for the purpose of educating her children. I mention these as illustrations only and with no desire of casting any reproach, for I am fully aware of the reasons why these States show such a backward condition in regard to educational work. Still the facts stare us in the face and call loudly upon the nation to come to their aid and, if possible, remedy the defect.

But why, it may be asked, select especially the revenue raised by the tax on spirituous liquors for this purpose? A careful study of this subject of national aid in educating our children will, I am satisfied, soon convince any one that it is of such immense importance that this question as to which particular part of our income shall be used is but a secondary matter. Still there are, as I think can be readily shown, good and valid reasons why this particular fund should be used for this purpose. To argue that, as intemperance is a curse, the money arising from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks would be more effectual in counteracting this evil than other money, would be an insult, not only to the Senate but to any person of ordinary intelligence.

Were there no better reasons, Mr. President, for selecting this particular fund I would certainly refrain from saying anything on this point. Is not every Senator and Member fully aware of the powerful influence brought to bear, session after session, upon Congress by the manufacturers of spirits to reduce the tax? If any means can be devised by which to bring to bear an equally strong opposing influence, and thus cause the one to neutralize the other, will it not be wise in Congress to do so?

Let Congress pass a law giving to the States and Territories all of but no more than the funds received from this tax, and at once every State and Territory and every school district therein, every normal, industrial, and agricultural institution and every teacher in the entire nation becomes interested in keeping this unchanged. Any member of Congress who would then yield to the clamor of the whisky manufacturers to lower the tax on their products would meet with such a storm of indignation from the people of his district who support the schools and educate the children as would be likely to forever retire him to private life. The educated people are those who are heard through the press and other public channels, and they are the ones who would protest against such a change. It would be a contest between money on the one hand and enlightenment and principle on the other, a battle waged for illiteracy and ignorance on the one part and education on the other.

But it may be argued that by appropriating this particular fund to this object we make it the interest of the free schools of the whole country and all their advocates and supporters not only to continue the manufacture of spirits to the present extent but to increase it. Such an argument has, I admit, some apparent truth on its face, but when we look a little below the surface, or rather to the practical effect, we shall find it to be a specious one that will not bear the test of critical examination. In what class and in what sections do we find the great body of the workers in the temperance cause? In the educated, and in those sections where schools are most encouraged and fostered. Give me the money necessary, and the power to enforce school attendance, and assign me the section where the greatest amount of intoxicating liquor is consumed, and in time I will raise up of their children a corps of temperance advocates who will gladly forego this income and educate their descendants at their own expense if thereby the manufacture and sale of this curse would cease. Let no one who is opposed to this bill base his opposition on this argument, for it is fallacious. Those who would most gladly see it become a law and go into operation will be most rejoiced if the effect shall be to diminish the manufacture and sale of this evil agent.

Why, Mr. President, some people got together in my State and passed resolutions condemning me for introducing this bill because they said they did not want their children educated on whisky-money. Now, to those people I have but a word to say. It is happy for them that they were educated at all, for without education their knowledge would be slight. In my own city where I live some of the very people that oppose this bill a few years ago went to the Legislature of my State and got a charter passed establishing what is known as the Washingtonian Home. What does that charter provide? I believe the fifth section of that charter provides that 10 per cent. of all the money derived from licenses for keeping saloons shall go to the support of the Washingtonian Home. That is in their charter, and that is where they derive their subsidy, and yet they do not want their children educated by taxes raised on whisky!

Let me just puncture that proposition for a moment. Some ministers—and I have the highest respect for ministers of the Gospel—have said "LOGAN'S bill is to encourage the manufacture of whisky." Now, let me say to those ministers that if you wipe out the whisky tax, which they are trying to help do by their clamor against propositions of this kind, you will find a distillery on every hilltop or in every valley where there is a spring branch all over the United States, and whisky will be as free as bread. Their conduct tends to put bread and whisky on the same plane. Bread is not taxed, but whisky is. Their proposition is not to use taxes raised from whisky, and therefore we should make it free. Bread and whisky then will be the only free things in this country. I suppose the temperance men will live on the bread, and I cannot say who the gentlemen are that will live on the whisky.

Now let me go a little further. I am sometimes asked to contribute for the purpose of building churches. Other people are; and I sometimes throw a penny in the contribution-box. I never had any man ask me where that money came from. Have you ever known a minister of the gospel—I ask my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] if he has ever known one to refuse a ten-dollar bill toward building a church because a saloon-keeper gave it? I never have; and yet a proposition to divert a certain portion of revenue for the purpose of educating the children of the country to make them temperance people and Christians is a great sin against God on my part.

I once heard a story that I think would apply to these gentlemen very nicely. There was a man—I will not mention his name—for whom I had great respect, and I think this whole country had. He was considered a statesman in his day. He sometimes indulged in a little game of cards. He was coming up the avenue one morning and met a poor old colored man. The old colored man, calling him by name, said: "My congregation is very poor; we want a place to worship God in; we have no house; will you please contribute a little something for that purpose?" The gentleman put his fingers in his pocket and pulled out a hundred-dollar bill. Said he, "I won that last night at a game of cards; if you will take that for the service of the Lord you can have it." He took it and said, "Thank you, sir. 'God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform.'" [Laughter.]

It may be considered unnecessary for me at this time and place to submit any remarks upon the advantages, to the people and the Government, of education. But there are some points in this connection that have relation to the principles embraced in this bill which I think may be appropriately referred to.

Nations are counted great and remembered chiefly for two things, wisdom and power. The former the property of the few; the latter the property of the many though wielded by the few. The ancients aimed to confine knowledge to a select class, and to make it, so far as possible, an inheritance transmissible to their descendants. The enlightened moderns seek to make it the common heritage of all. They search for all the specimens of mind, even to the shreds of it found in the imperfect souls of idiots, and cultivate all these. Why? Because every mind is an element of power. Private individuals ransack the streams and the mountains for particles of gold and offer them to the world as an addition to its wealth; but a nation finds honor in discovering minds and offering them to be used in all the duties of life. Des Cartes was accustomed to say: "In the universe there is nothing great but man, and in man there is nothing great but mind," an expression afterward condensed and improved by Sir William Hamilton thus: "In the universe nothing is great but mind."

Our systems of public schools give emphasis to this idea, and justify the search alluded to. A nation may honorably seek power; indeed if it will live it must seek and retain power. Those who are to be the power of the nation are the children scattered in the palaces, garrets and cellars of cities, and in the homes and cabins of the country, from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific shore. Whatever power there shall be, therefore, to do or direct, must be found in these children. Their tide, growing with every advancing year, must supply for the future of our nation, all its wealth, all its science, all its power, all its honor.

It may be assumed that as the present generation shall receive and educate its children, and welcome the annual swarms of immigrants crowding to our shores, so will the land increase in all that makes a people worthy of everlasting remembrance. And the same conditions which secure this will also establish our country in all that a free people can desire: power, honor, comfort, intelligence and wealth. What some of these conditions are it is not hard to declare, for knowledge universally diffused is so clearly the great force that even a statement to this effect is unnecessary. That "knowledge is power," is a truism now denied by none.

What is of so much worth as children, even reckoning on that very low plane, their simple cash value as prospective laborers? A fine climate gives effect to every interest and industry of a land; a fertile soil attracts population and enterprise to cultivate it; mines afford opportunity for the poor to gather wealth and scatter it abroad throughout the world. But none of these are of any more worth than a desert without hands to improve them; and what are hands worth without minds to direct them? A hand with an educated brain behind it is worth more than treble an ignorant one. Give the finest climate earth can show, the fattest soil the continents lift out of the sea, the richest mines the mountains contain, the safest harbors that border the sea or indent the land, and let a people be ignorant of their own capabilities, or of the resources of nature and her mighty agencies, and what are all these worth? Africa to-day has ten million square miles of soil as fertile as lies beneath the sun. She has a hundred millions of people. Yet the little island of England, with only about sixty thousand square miles and forty millions of people, produces annually, in a climate almost of the polar circle, more articles of food and clothing raised directly from the earth by agricultural labor alone than all that continent; and if you count in the manufactures which her machinery yields, she does the work of ten times the whole population of Africa. How is she enabled to do this? Simply because the educated mind of England can multiply her hands by a thousand fold. Nature lends her gravitation; even enslaves her sun and harnesses her lightning, so that they afford hands and feet to run and labor for those people who have learned how to use such agencies. The same thing is seen in any enlightened country, or at least where education is widely diffused. And yet in England less than half the common people's children are educated in any suitable degree. It is mind which has accomplished all these wonders; and minds are found in almost equal numbers in all ranks of society. The child of the peasant is often as full of genius as the child of the prince, with a stronger body and less tendency to habits of vice or recklessness; and if he can be found and educated the nation certainly derives the greatest possible benefits; and if a nation is to be raised to its highest degree of efficiency every particle of its mind must be utilized.

The war between France and Germany affords a pertinent illustration of the value of education in a peasantry to increase the worth of men, considered as mere machines of warfare. Every German soldier could read and write, and knew the geography of France. He could calculate almost as well as his officers, and he knew how to take care of his person and health. Those of France were nearly half illiterate, and as an army they seemed little more than a bank of snow before an April wind in comparison with the Germans.

The nine millions of children who daily march to the school-houses of the North, the West, and the South are better as a defense for the whole nation than a standing army as large as all the armies of Europe. The quarter of a million of school-teachers who daily drill these children in the school-houses are a better provision for training the nation in patriotism than all the statesmen and military officers of the Old World. Let every child of the nation be sent to a good school and trained by a proper method in broad national ideas, and we never need fear either foreign aggression and domination or domestic insurrection and sectional strifes and jealousies. Strength, peace, harmony, prosperity, nobility of character, patriotism, virtue and happiness would flow as from a perennial spring in the mountains to fill the land forever.

But the benefits of education are not confined to an increase of material prosperity and to the means of promoting the public defense. The physical comfort and general healthfulness of the whole population are advanced thereby in even a greater ratio than the interests before named. Can it be reckoned no benefit to a community that every person possesses sufficient intelligence to understand the reasons for cleanliness and exercise, the necessity for pure air and good food, and the means of securing all these? Are more comfortable and beautiful homes no profit to families, and do not all arts which knowledge fosters contribute to the happiness and power of a people? In the mere matter of bodily health it would not be difficult to show that if the whole of a community could be brought to practice the precepts of hygiene, which could be readily learned by a child of fourteen without loss of time for ordinary family duties or for needed rest, at least two-thirds of all the diseases which now afflict the human race would be as effectually banished from the earth as reptiles are from Ireland.

The effect, also, of the general diffusion of education among the masses of our population in respect to their moral condition can scarcely be calculated. That evil will ever go side by side with good in this world experience leaves us no reason to doubt. That while, by a general school system we are educating those who will be an honor to themselves and a benefit to society and the nation, we are also to a certain extent educating the vicious, is true; but that on the whole education tends largely, very larely, to increace the better element in proportion to the vicious, is a fact that cannot be denied. To enter fully upon the discussion of this proposition would be out of place here, notwithstanding its great importance in this connection. But it is evident to every intelligent person that safety in this matter consists in continued progress. To halt in the race will result in giving over society and the nation to the control of the vicious. To education therefore must we look for all the elements of national strength, and the more generally it is diffused, and the higher its grade, in like proportion will our national power be increased. So that if Congress intends to do anything in this great work that will be adequate to the wants of our people, it must be done with a liberal hand, and in a manner that will show manifest justice to all sections. While ten or fifteen millions may and will do much good if granted to one section, those who are imposing heavy burdens upon themselves in other sections to educate their children will have just grounds to complain that injustice has been done them.

While Illinois spends 1 per cent. of the assessed value of her taxable property, and Iowa 1.4 per cent. for school purposes, Georgia spends but one-tenth of 1 per cent. and North Carolina but one-fourth of 1 per cent. for this purpose. This difference cannot, of course, be charged to inability, but, to put it in the mildest form, it must be charged to neglect, or the want of appreciation of the value of education. To help the latter, then, and withhold assistance from the former would have too much the appearance of rewarding the negligent, who are unwilling even to do what they can to help themselves, and refusing aid to those who are burdening themselves to prepare their children to be useful members of society and valuable citizens of the nation. I am as desirous as any one in this Senate to assist those States that are in the background in this respect, for I am fully aware they are laboring under difficulties which do not apply to their sister States, and this is one great reason, in fact I may say the chief reason, why I have brought forward this bill. But I wish the Government to be just in distributing its favors, and this cannot be done effectually in this matter with much less than the amount I have proposed. Although money from this tax has no more inherent value in it for this purpose than any other fund, yet there is something pleasing in the idea that the mighty stream of liquid sin, flowing on in spite of all the efforts made to check it, and bearing multitudes downward to its whirlpool of crime and death, will thus be made, by its very downward pressure, a power to lift as many more from the depths of ignorance; that the very streams the distillers and retailers are sending forth to foster vice and crime may be used as a force to destroy their origin, just as the maddened waters of Niagara may be made a force to level the precipice from which they fall. So far, then, as the use of this particular fund in this way inspires this feeling in those who encourage education and temperance, so far we may truly say it would be more effectual than any other.

Men called statesmen are apt to believe that they control the masses, but when the masses, whether right or wrong, become aroused on any question pertaining to government, the men known as statesmen are as powerless to control them as they are to direct the storm, and so the leading men, or statesmen as they are called, join their respective sides and add fury to the desires of the people. Aristides did not control Athens, nor Xerxes Persia, in that fullest sense which brought the destinies of nations into conflict. The common Greeks and the common Persians, who had in some way learned in their ignorance to hate and despise each other, made those furious wars possible, if not necessary. So it will always be. The instincts, as we sometimes call them, and these are scarcely anything but the transmitted notions and sentiments of one generation accumulating power in another, will sway the populace and influence the policy of rulers. They will by their desires force the government into unwise measures. If they are selfish they will compel a selfish and perhaps an aggressive policy. If they are vicious the government cannot long maintain a consistent course of justice and honor. If they are divided by sectional jealousies and trained to hostile feelings, can there be union of sentiment and action?

In our own land to-day the grossly ignorant are numerous enough to control the affairs of the nation. They hold the balance of power, if they could only unite. But while they do not unite as a class, their influence may do worse than form a union among themselves; for any apparent attempt to form a party of the ignorant would undoubtedly be met by a combination of the intelligent. Their wishes and desires, their prejudices and jealousies, may suggest to demagogues opportunities to gain selfish ends and plunge us into still greater sectional strifes. We need, as a nation so extended, to foster homogeneous institutions in our hundred different climates and regions. The one grand thing to do in every one of these regions, each larger than most of the nations of the world, is to secure the uniformity of intelligence and virtue. We need no other.

If our people in the pine woods of Maine or Michigan; if those in the mines of the Carolinas and Virginia, in Colorado and Nevada, in California and Alaska; if the cultivators of the farms in Ohio and Dakota, of the plantations of Georgia and Louisiana; if the herders of the ranches of Texas and New Mexico, can all be rendered intelligent enough to see the excellence of virtue and be made noble enough to practice its self-restraining laws; if they can be taught wisdom enough to appreciate the ten thousand advantages of a national Union embracing a hundred climates and capable of sustaining a myriad of mutually helpful industries, freely interchanging the products and acting on each other as mutual forces to stimulate every one to its highest capacity of rival endeavor, then we would be sure of a stable Union and an immortality of glory.

Is it not now easy to see that the education of the young, and one common plan with one common purpose, the people's children taught by the people themselves, in schools made by the people themselves, yet in some noble sense patronized by the nation and supervised by the nation in some proper manner, will aid in making on this continent a nation what we hope to be and what the foreshadowings of Providence seem to indicate we ought to be, the one great and mighty nation of the world. We have the same glorious Constitution. Let us all from highest to lowest, from richest to poorest, from blackest to whitest, learn to read its words as they are written, and then we shall be most likely to interpret its provisions alike and administer its enactments alike in justice and honor.

We all read the same Bible and claim to practice the same golden rule. Let us instruct all the youth whom the beneficent Father gives us, natives of this land or born on other shores, in the grand principles of morality which it inculcates, and in all the science which it has fostered. We all inherit from our motherland the same invaluable code of common laws and institutions. Let us, if need, be careful all to obtain enough knowledge to read and understand the laws which the Legislatures of the several States shall make and the decisions in accordance with that common law which their courts shall render. We have received from our ancestors and from the present generation of philosophic scientists a body of knowledge and wisdom the worth of which even genius can scarcely estimate. Let that be given to every child that breathes our atmosphere in substantially the same spelling-book and primer, in schools as good among the snows of Aroostook as in marts of New York, Boston, or Charleston; as free on the shores of Puget Sound as on the prairies of Illinois, and as well taught in the rice-fields of the South as on the hills of Connecticut. Then we shall be, "one and inseparable, now and forever."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois wish to have the bill referred?

Mr. LOGAN. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, and an accompanying paper, in further response to the resolution of the Senate of the 13th of December last, calling for correspondence touching affairs in or between Peru and Chili.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 16, 1882.

STATUE OF CHIEF-JUSTICE MARSHALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. VOORHEES as the committee on the part of the Senate to contract for the erection of a statue to the memory of Chief-Justice Marshall, as provided for in the act approved March 10, 1882.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I call up the appropriation bill which is the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out lines 115 and 116, as follows: "For necessary and special mail facilities on trunk lines $500,000;" and in lieu thereof to insert:

For necessary and special facilities on railroad lines, $650,000; said facilities to be ratably distributed, as near as may be, on railroad lines leading to and from the principal cities in the different sections of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. It will be observed that the Committee on Appropriations have increased the amount found in the bill as it passed the House for special facilities on railroad lines from $500,000 to $650,000, and they have put upon the expenditure of the sum a certain limitation. The history of the provisions with reference to special facilities on railroad lines is as follows: the first appropriation occurred in 1878, and was for the sum of $150,000, to be paid out of the appropriation of that year for railroad transportation. In 1879 the sum of $125,000 was appropriated for the same purpose. In 1880 the sum was restored to that originally appropriated, $150,000, and in that provision there appears the first mention of postal cars. In 1881 the sum was increased to $350,000, and for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1882, the sum appropriated was $425,000.

The manner in which this sum has been spent became the subject of investigation by the committee. I have in my hand a letter from the superintendent of railway mail service, transmitted to the committee by the Postmaster-General, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, but will not ask to have read unless some member of the Senate shall so desire. I will state briefly the condition in which the committee found the service: the special railway mail service provided for by the appropriation of last year consists of a train running from New York to Springfield, Massachusetts, leaving New York at 4.30 a. m.; one leaving for Philadelphia and southern points at the same hour; one leaving New York for Chicago via the New York Central Railroad at substantially the same hour, and one leaving for Pittsburgh and the West at 8 a. m. New York is the initial point of this service. There are three trains leaving that city at an unusual hour, that is to say, at an hour not usual for passenger trains, and which run at a higher speed than the ordinary trains.

The train which leaves for Springfield makes a connection there which is said to be valuable for all portions of New England. The train which leaves New York for Chicago connects at Albany with a train which leaves that city for the West, and which continues thereafter at a high rate of speed until it reaches the city of Toledo, where a delay occurs of about three hours, and then the mail thus carried is taken up by a train running at an ordinary rate of speed, and is carried to the city of Chicago. The train which leaves New York running southward extends, via Washington, Richmond, Petersburgh, and Charleston, to Savannah, where it makes direct connection for Jacksonville. The train leaving for the West via the same road makes through and quick connections at Pittsburgh, Chicago, Indianapolis, and Saint Louis.

These special trains leave New York at an hour which is convenient to the newspapers which are published in that city, and contribute very materially to their circulation and business. They carry besides a large letter mail, comprising the deposit of letters in the New York office during the after part of the day, and perform a valuable service alike to the business of New York and to a large extent of country to which quick connection with that city is useful. But valuable as this service is, it is far too limited for the expenditure or to warrant carrying on unless it can be extended so as to embrace practically the whole country, and the committee felt that it should either be dropped altogether or made more comprehensive. They did not, however, feel warranted in considering it wholly as a new question, knowing that the country had never willingly submitted to a reduction of mail facilities, but had always responded to an increase of those facilities by increased revenue. The disposition of this fund they felt to be partial and unequal; not that it had not been made proper use of, but that the amount was too small to afford to all the important sections of the country the facilities to which each is equally entitled.

For this purpose and with this view, being confronted, as they believe, either with the necessity of going backward or of going forward, of taking off the facilities already provided or of increasing them, they felt that it would be more in consonance with what they believe to be the interests and wishes of the people and with the history of the legislation upon this question heretofore to add to the appropriation in order that Chicago, Saint Paul, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, New Orleans, and Boston might have the benefit of these facilities in common with the city of New York and the section of country which is tributary to that city.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask him if the letter to which he has referred contains the table communicated to Mr. CASWELL?

Mr. PLUMB. The letter of the superintendent of railway mail service, to which I have adverted, sets out at very considerable length not only the distribution of the fund in detail but the results accomplished by connections made which before were not within the possibility of the Department. In House of Representatives Report No. 113, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, on page 2, is found a table which summarizes the information which is contained in this letter, and I will ask that when the letter is put in the RECORD, following it may also be added this table, which comes from the superintendent.

Mr. BECK. It is a short table which is put in a very simple form, it will be observed.

The letter and table are as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the general superintendent of railway mail service, giving a detailed statement of the expenditure of the special-facilities appropriation for the present fiscal year, and of the beneficial results thereby accomplished.

Very respectfully,

T. O. HOWE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a statement respecting the expenditure of the appropriation for special facilities for the present fiscal year, and a detailed statement of its operations:

New York to Springfield, Massachusetts, $17,647.06, (New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.) This is for fast mail that leaves New York at 5 a. m. This train was established at the instance of the Post-Office Department. It receives mail leaving Washington, District of Columbia, the previous day at 5.40 p. m.; Baltimore, 7.25 p. m.; Philadelphia, 12 midnight, and New York 5 a. m. Delivers and receives mail between New York and New Haven, Connecticut, where it arrives at 8.03 a. m. Without this train the mail would be delivered at New Haven at 10.20 a. m. It connects at New Haven with train leaving at 8.08 a. m., with an agent, for New London and Providence. Mail is received and delivered at all intermediate offices, and delivered at New London at 10.10 a. m. instead of 12.46 p. m.; Providence at 12.45 instead of 3.45 p. m., and there is a train connection from Providence to Boston. The New Haven and Willimantic agent leaves New Haven in connection with this train at 8.05 a. m., and at Willimantic connects with the Boston and Waterbury agent. Mails are delivered and received at all places between New Haven and Boston. Mails are delivered at Middletown at 8.58 a. m. instead of 11.57 a. m.; Willimantic, 10.05 a. m. instead of 1.30 p. m., arriving in Boston 1.25 p. m. instead of 3.55 p. m.; arriving at Hartford at 9.44 a. m. instead of 11.45 a. m.; Springfield at 10.40 a. m. instead of 12.28 p. m. Mail for Lowell and Lawrence is delivered at 3.30 p. m.; formerly delivered at 6.30 p. m. This will also apply to Worcester, Salem, Lynn, Newburyport, Haverhill, and many other important offices in Massachusetts, to Nashua, Manchester, Concord, Portsmouth, Dover, Great Falls, and other offices in New Hampshire, and to points in Maine as far east as Portland.

This train is not in the Railway Guide as one of the company's passenger trains. It carries a very large mail.

New York to Buffalo, New York, $46,021.52, (New York Central and Hudson River Railroad.) This is for fast mail that leaves New York 4.35 a. m., arrives at Chicago the following morning at 9.40 a. m.; also for another fast mail that leaves New York at 8.50 p. m., arrives at Cleveland, Ohio, the following day at 1.50 p. m., Toledo, 5.40 p. m., and Chicago the second day at 6 a. m. Train leaves New York 4.35 a. m. Three postal cars on this train—New York to Syracuse; two Syracuse to Buffalo, and one from Buffalo to Chicago. This train was established at the instance of the Post-Office Department, runs special to Albany, where the postal cars are transferred to the regular express train "made up" there for Buffalo, and from Buffalo to Chicago on the limited express, where it arrives at 9.40 a. m. At Fishkill it connects the Millerton and Dutches Junction agent; delivers mail at Newburgh at 6.10 a. m., instead of 10.01 a. m.; Poughkeepsie at 6.30 a. m., instead of 10.36 a. m. At Rhinecliff it connects the Boston Corners and Rhinecliff agent, delivers mail at Rhinecliff, Roudout, and Kingston at 6.54 a. m., instead of 11.08 a. m.; Hudson, 7.32 a. m., instead of 12.01 p. m.; Albany, 8.20 a. m., instead of 1 p. m.; Troy, 8.50 a. m., instead of 1.15 p. m.; Schenectady, at 9 a. m., instead of 1.55 p. m.; Little Falls, 10.45 a. m., instead of 3.50 p. m.; Utica, 11.22 a. m., instead of 4.30 p. m.; Rome, 11.53 a. m., instead of 5.09 p. m.; Syracuse, at 1 p. m., instead of 6.25 p. m.; Rochester, 4.05 p. m., instead of 9.25 p. m.; Batavia, 5.20 p. m., instead of 11.05 p. m.; Buffalo, 6.30 p. m., instead of midnight. Formerly these postal cars left New York at 8 a. m. and arrived at Chicago the following day at 7.40 p. m. The arrival at 9.40 a. m. instead of 7.40 p. m. is equivalent to the saving of one business day to Chicago, and for all points west and northwest of Chicago, as all the principal connections are made at Chicago; and this is particularly the case for all points west of Omaha, as the Union Pacific only runs one train per day, and this train makes the connection. The southwestern mails from New York are sent via the Pennsylvania Railroad; yet there is a large accumulation of mail on this train for that section, and the connection is made at Toledo, Ohio, which saves as much time as for points west of Chicago.

Leaving New York at 8.50 p. m. There are three postal cars on this train that runs special with express cars (no passengers) to Cleveland, Ohio, (a distance of six hundred and twenty-three miles.) Formerly this mail left New York at 6 p. m. which necessitated a close in the New York office at 4.30 p. m., too early to get all the mail, as there is a large amount of mail posted between the closing for the 6 p. m. train and that of the 8.50 p. m. and all of the mail that accumulates between the hours above named and forwarded at 8.50 p. m. gains twelve hours. This train receives at Albany the mail that left Boston at 6 p. m., whereas if the postal cars left New York at 6 p. m. it would require a departure at Boston at 3 p. m. This train receives and delivers mail at all important offices between New York and Buffalo, where it arrives at 9.15 a. m.; Erie, Pennsylvania, 11.31 a. m.; Cleveland, Ohio, 1.55 p. m. At this point connections are made for the South and Southwest, viz: Cincinnati, arriving at 11.15 p. m.; Louisville, 8.20 a. m., and Saint Louis 8.20 a. m. This train delivers and receives mail at all offices between Buffalo and Cleveland, and all of the larger offices between Cleveland and Chicago. Arrives at Toledo at 5.30 p. m., Chicago the second morning at 6 a. m., in time for the first delivery and to make all outward connections. Mail that leaves New York at 8.50 p. m. arrives at Cleveland, also Toledo, in time for delivery the following day, also at all intermediate points.

Buffalo to Chicago, $38,004.28, (Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad.) This is for a continuance of the two fast mail trains last above mentioned to Chicago.

New York to Pittsburgh, $41,935.91, (Pennsylvania Railroad.) This arrangement was for a fast mail leaving New York at 8 p. m., arriving at Pittsburgh the following morning, Cincinnati the following night, and Saint Louis, Missouri, the second morning; and for another fast mail that left New York at 8 a. m., which now leaves at 4.35 a. m. Train from New York, 4.35 a. m. This train hauls the Washington postal car to Philadelphia and has two postal cars for Pittsburgh and the West and Southwest. At Columbus, Ohio, one car goes to Cincinnati and the other to Saint Louis. Mail is delivered and received at all offices between New York and Pittsburgh. At Harrisburgh at 11 a. m. instead of 3.15 p. m., Altoona at 3.45 p. m. instead of 7.40 p. m., Pittsburgh 8.50 p. m. instead of 12 midnight. Delivers and receives mail at all of the larger offices between Pittsburgh and Columbus; Columbus at 3.45 a. m. instead of 6.20 a. m.; arrives at Cincinnati at 8 a. m. instead of 3.05 p. m., and makes the southern connections for Louisville and the South via Louisville and Nashville Railroad; arrives at Louisville at 12.45 p. m. instead of 8.05 p. m. Formerly this connection was broken at Cincinnati, consequently there was a delay of twelve hours for all points southwest from Cincinnati. This train via Louisville and Nashville Railroad has a direct connection to New Orleans, also to Memphis, Tennessee. The 8 p. m. train: three postal cars on this train at the present time. On the first day of the last fiscal year there was a fast mail established on the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York, New York, and Columbus, Ohio, leaving New York at 8.30 p. m., after the close of business, receiving all the important business mail of the day, and by fast running overtaking at Columbus, Ohio, the regular fast express that left New York two hours and a half earlier. At Columbus the postal cars attached to this train are separated, one going to Cincinnati, Ohio, on the regular fast express, and the other two going to Saint Louis, Missouri, via Indianapolis, Indiana, on the regular express and passenger train, arriving at Saint Louis in time to make connections with all morning outward trains. The late departure at New York largely increases the amount of mail forwarded on this train, which is advanced twelve hours.

January 21, 1882, the schedule of the first-mentioned train was changed to arrive at Pittsburgh at 1.50 p. m., thereby losing the morning connection at Pittsburgh, which will reduce the amount paid this company at least $8,833.34 for the present fiscal year.

Pittsburgh to Saint Louis, Missouri, $18,801.51, (Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad.) This arrangement is to continue the last above-mentioned connection to Cincinnati, Ohio, and Saint Louis, Missouri.

Pittsburgh to Chicago, $7,055.77, (Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad.) This is to continue the connection to Chicago.

New York to Quantico, Virginia, $41,900, (Pennsylvania Railroad.) This is for fast mail that leaves New York 4.35 a. m (with connection that leaves Boston the previous evening at 6.15) for Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Wilmington, Charleston, and Savannah, with connection to Jacksonville, Florida, and delivers mail at Baltimore 9.50 a. m. instead of 3.36 p. m., Washington 11.20 a. m. instead of 4.40 p. m., Richmond 3 p. m. instead of 9.50 p. m., Petersburgh at 4 p. m., instead of 19.55 p. m., Weldon 6 p. m. instead of 1.20 a. m., Wilmington 11.05 p. m. instead of 7.05 a. m., Florence 2.47 a. m. instead of 11.40 a. m., Columbia 6.10 a. m. instead of 4.25 p. m., Augusta 9.52 a. m. instead of 8.40 p. m., Charleston 6.50 a. m. instead of 4.25 p. m., Savannah 10.45 a. m. instead of 9.40 p. m., and connects with train that arrives at Jacksonville at 5.30 p. m. This line receives and delivers mail at intermediate points.

Quantico to Richmond, $17,419.26, (Richmond, Fredericksburgh and Potomac Railroad.) This is for a continuance of the fast mail last above mentioned.

Richmond to Petersburgh, Virginia, $4,197.50, (Richmond and Petersburgh Railroad.) Same as last above.

Petersburgh to Weldon, North Carolina, $11,680, (Petersburgh Railroad.) Same as last above.

Weldon to Wilmington, North Carolina, $29,565, (Wilmington and Weldon Railroad.) Same as last above.

Wilmington to Florence, South Carolina, $20,075, (Wilmington, Columbia and Augusta Railroad.) Same as last above.

Florence to Ashley River Junction, South Carolina, four months, $5,700, (North Eastern Railroad.) Same as last above for four months.

Charleston to Savannah, Georgia, $4,000, (Savannah and Charleston Railroad.) Same as last above.

Florence to Columbia, South Carolina, $300, (Wilmington, Columbia, and Augusta Railroad.) To make the Augusta connection.

Richmond to Atlanta, Georgia, $62,778.29, (Richmond and Danville Railroad.) This was for fast mail to Atlanta, Georgia. November 20, 1881, it was transferred to start from Washington instead of Richmond, which did not materially increase the expense, and February 12, 1882, discontinued by the railroad company. This was for a fast mail to Atlanta, Georgia. It left Richmond on the arrival of the fast mail from the north and arrived at Atlanta at 11 a. m. By the regular train the mail would have arrived at 12 midnight. It connected the noon train out of Atlanta and arrived at New Orleans at 10.22 a. m. instead of 10.02 p. m. There is a postal car on this train and mails are delivered at all intermediate points. All mail for points west of Atlanta was advanced twelve hours, and New Orleans received the benefit of one business day.

Alexandria to Lynchburgh, Virginia, $19,067, (Virginia Midland Railroad.) This was for a night train on this road with through connections to the South. Prior to February 12, 1882, it left at 10.15 p. m. and made the same connection to Atlanta as the line via Richmond that left Washington at 5 p. m. Since that date it has left at 7 p. m.

Tocoi to Saint Augustine, Florida, $312, (Saint John's Railway.) This is for twenty-six additional round trips in connection with the night boat on the Saint John's River.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. THOMPSON,
General Superintendent.

W. B. THOMPSON,
General Superintendent.

Hon. L. B. CASWELL, House of Representatives.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a provision in the bill inserted by the House after debate, found in line 48 and following, which is to this effect:

And if any railroad company shall fail or refuse—

I am giving the provision now as it has been amended by the Senate Committee—

And if any railroad company shall fail or refuse to transport the mails for which this appropriation is made, when required by the Post-Office Department, upon the fastest train or trains run upon said road, said company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent. of the amount now provided by law.

It has been suggested that this provision would obviate the necessity of the appropriation now under consideration for special facilities; but it will be observed that the provision as it came from the House only refers to trains which are provided by the railway companies for the transaction of their own business. It does not contemplate the use of special trains to be run upon a schedule to be furnished by the Department and adjusted solely with reference to the requirements of the mail service.

The appropriation as it now stands in the bill, as reported from the committee, adds about 6 per cent. to the cost of the railway mail service. It is a large item, and still it is not so large as that it does not contain the suggestion that it may speedily become larger. It is a fund to be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. There did not seem to be any way to limit the expenditure of that fund except by the phraseology employed by the committee, and it remains practically, as I have said, a fund to be given by the Postmaster-General for such facilities to such railroads and under such terms and conditions as he may see fit to impose.

In point of fact, the fund as now expended is upon a mutual adjustment between the railroad company and the Department. The Postmaster-General has no power to require of any railroad company that it shall render any portion of the service contemplated by this amendment. He can only negotiate with them and get the best possible terms. That he claims to have done, and I have no doubt he has done it.

I think it will be found by taking the amount of money expended last year and by comparison with the mileage of fast-mail transportation secured that the amount paid per mile per annum is about one hundred and fifty dollars, which is about one-half the maximum permitted to be paid as a total sum to any railroad company for transporting the mails up to about ten or twelve years ago.

But the chief objection is that the fund is to be spent in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and that like all such funds there is likely to be a demand for its increase, and that demand will be hard to resist, and there is great probability that abuses such as have occurred in other branches of this service may arise, unless some restriction is put upon its use. It was not, therefore, entirely without apprehension that the committee felt constrained to retain the provision, but also to enlarge it, for the considerations heretofore alluded to.

Mr. BECK. I desire the Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the sub-committee on this bill, to give the Senate the benefit of whatever his opinion may be as to the cost of fourth-class matter, and what changes should be made in that respect, because I expect to say something on that subject and I would rather he would tell the facts. The problem of cheapening the mail service of this country is because the merchandise carried, which is carried at a ridiculously low rate, considering the territory, makes the immense cost of the Post-Office; and if it could be brought to anything like a reasonable amount, or taken off the expedited cars, the service would be self-sustaining to-day.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Before my friend from Kansas proceeds further, I wish to add to what my colleague on the committee from Kentucky has said, that I would especially like to hear the Senator from Kansas upon the space required for these mails. It is said entire cars are demanded where half a car would afford plenty of room.

Mr. BECK. If I may be allowed, I will add that the fourth-class matter pays one cent an ounce, or sixteen cents a pound, or sixty-four cents for four pounds, and includes women's bonnets, boots, harness, and all sorts of things requiring space. There are stores all over Arizona and the extreme West to which matter is carried by mail and over star routes at sixty-four cents for four pounds, when there is not an article in the store that could be carried in the mail at such a rate. We expedite these mails, furnish space, and pay for space for things that yield us sixty-four cents when the same amount of letters would pay us fifteen dollars. I do not believe the United States ought to carry merchandise for merchants at one-tenth part of what the United States pays to get the merchandise carried. We are bound to carry intelligence, no matter what it costs; but we are not bound to carry women's bonnets, and boots, and shoes, and harness for a much less amount than it costs. I should like to hear from the Senator from Kansas upon that subject, because I believe with a proper adjustment of that class of matter and with a proper charge we could make the Post-Office self-sustaining, and do nobody any harm, and give the merchants who are using our mails all the facilities they ought to have.

Mr. PLUMB. The lowest price paid to any railroad for transporting the mails is $42.75 per mile per annum; the highest price is about twelve hundred dollars per mile per annum—the difference arising chiefly on account of difference in weight of mails carried.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does that include what we pay for what is called expediting the mails?

Mr. PLUMB. No, that does not include the special price at all. I am speaking of the regular rates provided by law.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my colleague on the committee who has charge of the bill that that is the important point which we are now discussing.

Mr. PLUMB. As the Senator from West Virginia will notice, in discussing this question the whole question of railway mail transportation necessarily came up; that could not be avoided. For the purpose of arriving as near as may be at the cost of carrying the different classes of mail I have had prepared a table showing what the net cost of carrying a pound of matter is, or rather I might state it in an inverse way, the distance which three cents will pay for carrying a pound of matter. That is, the pay given to the railway company, not including the expenses of the Post-Office Department proper, nor including the salaries of the route agents, and not including any pay for expedition. The table is as follows:

Pounds carried.	Rate per mile.	Cents.	Miles.
Two hundred	$42 75	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	51. 23
Five hundred	64 13	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	72. 09
One thousand	85 50	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	128. 21
Fifteen hundred	106 88	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	153. 75
Two thousand	128 25	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	170. 83
Thirty-five hundred	149 63	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	256. 25
Five thousand	171 00	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	320. 25
Two thousand, (additional)	21 38	3 cents will carry 1 pound.	1, 024. 59

The lowest price per mile, except as to the additional two thousand pounds, is really the dearest service on account of the small amount of mail carried—the ratio of price constantly and rapidly diminishing as the amount of mail increases. Probably the average distance over which a pound of mail matter can be carried for three cents, exclusive of wages of employés and incidental expenses, at the present rates paid to railroad companies is about one hundred and fifty miles. The Department carries a very large and a largely increasing amount of what is known as third and fourth class matter at a price which is grossly out of proportion to the cost that is paid for its carriage. In point of fact a large proportion of the merchandise that is put upon the shelves of dealers in remote sections of the country is carried from New York and other cities as mail matter in four-pound packages at rates which are far below the cost of carriage, and also much lower than any other known method of transportation. It is safe to say that this class of matter is carried at a price not over one-third or one-half its cost.

The practice of using the mails for the purpose of the transportation of these classes of mail matter has been carried to such an extent that it is an essential feature of the business of large houses in New York and in all the other leading cities. This cheap, safe, and expeditious method of transporting merchandise constitutes their main reliance for country retail trade. There are places in New York where offices are rented and where the sole duty of the occupant is to take the merchandise that is sent to him from the wholesale dealer and put it up in four-pound packages and transmit it by mail to his employer, the merchant in the remote section, who is either off a line of railroad or who finds the Government rate the cheapest attainable. In addition, the mails bring thousands of orders from all sections of the country for single articles of four pounds' weight or under—chiefly dry goods and clothing perhaps, but embracing as well almost everything that can be purchased in a large city, and which can be got into a package weighing four pounds or under. Some years ago I happened into such an office as I have described, where were being put up harness, boots, shoes, &c., for a merchant doing business in New Mexico, who had sent to him in this way a very large portion of the stock of goods which filled his store.

The cheapness, speed, and safety of the Government transportation through the mails is so well recognized that the business of carrying fourth-class matter has largely increased within the last few years. It embraces now not only articles of great value but of great bulk as well—bonnets, fine millinery, &c. And it is no unusual sight to see in a mail car packages of fourth-class matter covering a space of eight or ten square feet. Articles weighing but one pound will sometimes contain six or seven square feet of space. Such members of the Senate as have ridden in a postal car have seen packages of this description corded up between the stanchions, from floor to roof, taking up as much space as all other classes of mail matter put together.

The loss to the Government by the transportation of this class of matter if saved would go far toward making up the deficiencies in the postal service so much complained of.

The Committee on Appropriations considered in connection with this the propriety of limiting transportation upon the fast mails to letters and newspapers, cutting off from its benefit third and fourth class matter, but upon the statement of the superintendent of railway mail service that it would result in no saving, the idea was abandoned.

This is a very interesting question, and if the committee had felt itself warranted in going into general legislation upon this bill, no doubt many suggestions of amendment would have been made looking to greater economy in the matter of mail transportation; but the committee did not feel warranted in going into that question except as it might be necessary to give effect by way of extension or limitation to the provisions of the bill as it came from the House.

A suggestion has been made that for the purpose of meeting part of this expense there should be a reduction upon the price paid to railroad companies receiving over a certain amount per mile per annum. Take for instance the New York Central Railroad Company, which has had the benefit of a special mention in the report of the late Postmaster-General. That railroad company is receiving about twelve hundred dollars per mile per annum for carrying the mail, in addition to the price it receives for postal-car service and for such special facilities as are contemplate by this amendment, its total compensation being about fourteen hundred dollars per mile per annum.

A good deal of discussion has occurred in late years upon the question of the rates of railway transportation for freight; and it has been exhibited to the country in the report of an officer of the Government that during the last ten years this rate has been largely reduced by competition. I think the average rate now charged for freight upon the leading trunk lines is less than one cent per ton per mile, while the Government pays to the same roads from ten to twelve cents per ton per mile for carrying its mails. In order that that statement may not do injustice to the railway companies, it is fair to say that in addition to the mails they carry the employés of the service; and if we compute that carrying upon a basis of a run of two hundred miles a day for each one of the employés, you would have a carriage of about six hundred thousand miles per annum, which of course would amount to a considerable sum, which it is proper to consider in determining what pay the companies ought to have.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator tell us, for I have forgotten, how much the Post-Office Department said the railroad companies saved us by delivering the mails at stations within eighty rods of the depot?

Mr. PLUMB. I was about to come to that.

Mr. BECK. That is a matter which cuts quite a figure in this question.

Mr. PLUMB. In addition to that, as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, the railways deliver the mails to all post-offices upon their lines within eighty rods of their track; and the Post-Office Department estimate that that delivery is a saving to the Government of about two million dollars per annum. In addition to that there should be taken into account the fact that they furnish a space which is much larger in proportion than is necessary for the carriage of ordinary freight of the weight of the mails. Take, for instance, the room which they furnish upon the short lines; that is, not only the room which carries the mail proper, always light in comparison with ordinary freight, but also the desks, the pigeon-holes, and all the appliances for the rendition of the service and the space in which the agent must himself labor. Upon lines running postal cars there is carried usually not less than three of these cars; that is, east of the Missouri River. One will be the working car and two will be storage cars. As the mail is worked in the working car and delivered along the line other supplies are drawn from the storage cars, and frequently those storage cars will run—one of them, sometimes both—long distances entirely empty. As I said, they carry in that way an amount of dead weight which is out of proportion to the dead weight which is carried in the transportation of ordinary freight; but still it is tolerably well established that the leading railroad lines of the country are getting a compensation which is in excess of the compensation which they charge to private persons for the transactions of a similar character.

But into the question of carriage enters the new question of speed; the demand is that the mails shall be carried on the fastest trains, shall be delivered as soon as possible. The Post-Office Department regards that as one of the elements which should enter into the contracts made hereafter; they believe that Congress ought to enact such legislation as will enable them to determine the rate of pay based upon the weight of the mail, the space which it occupies, and the speed at which it is carried.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Would it interrupt my friend to ask him a question?

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not catch exactly what he said in regard to the pay by the Government for carrying the mails by space, and that is an important point. For instance, what is the difference in the space taken by the Government and that by an express company, for which the same amount would be paid? I heard my friend speak of that, but I am not clear as to what he said.

Mr. PLUMB. I stated it as my belief, and is I think the belief of the Department as well, judging by the report of the late Postmaster-General, that the leading lines of the country over which large amounts of mail are carried are receiving more from the Government for carrying its mails than they are receiving from private parties for carrying the same amount of similar freight.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does that include what is known as the expedited pay, or is it exclusive of that?

Mr. PLUMB. It is exclusive of expedited pay, in my judgment. That amount may not be largely in excess, but it will be apparent to any one who will examine the table showing the regular and rapid increase in the price paid, and who will also take the care to examine and ascertain what is a fact, that the amount of dead weight carried is constantly diminishing proportionately.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend having looked at the figures, I wish to state that I have been informed that the same space which is occupied by the mail on different trains over any of the great railroads would bring more revenue to the company if employed in the carriage of express or other high-priced goods. I do not know what the fact is.

Mr. PLUMB. There is one feature of railway mail transportation that does not attach to any other kind of transportation. The Government pays so much per car per mile per annum, whether anything is carried in the car or not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that of course. That is not the question I meant to ask.

Mr. PLUMB. That is one of the elements. If the railroad company gets $50 per mile per annum for running a car any way, the question of the amount of matter carried in that car is affected in a corresponding way.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not made myself understood. Would it incommode my friend if I should interrupt him further?

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am with the Senator in all he has said; but I have understood as to the space required by the mails on the different trains that on some of them it is an entire car, on some of them half a car, on some of them a third of a car. I have also understood that if the same space which the Government requires were occupied by express goods it would pay the railroad company a greater amount per mile. I do not mean now per pound; I am not talking of that; because sometimes a car is well loaded up and sometimes not; but I am speaking of what is paid both by the express company and by the Government when they run over a road. The question is, which pays to the company the greatest amount for the space occupied, the express company or the Government for the mails.

Mr. PLUMB. That is one of the questions, and only one. The question is twofold; it is one of space and one of weight, because, as I said, the Government pays to the railway company for space apart from any question of weight. In the first instance the leading lines are paid so much per car per mile per annum according to the size of the car, the lowest price being $25 and the highest being $50 per mile per car per annum, owing to the size of the car. That relates merely to the question of space. In other words, a railway company hauling a forty-foot car empty gets $25 per mile per annum for hauling it, and that is a question of space. When it hauls a sixty-foot car it gets $50 per mile per annum, which is also a question of space.

That is one element. Then, of course, the next element is that of weight; and these are the only elements that enter into the carriage of the mail, except as we have introduced this new element of speed in the appropriation under consideration. As I say, it is my belief that upon the large lines where the mails most accumulate, where there is the largest amount to carry, where there is a diminished ratio of dead weight to carry, I believe the amounts paid the companies exceed that charged by them to private parties for carrying similar matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend understands that on many of the roads the express companies pay exactly in the same way; they pay for the space allowed, and if they have a car load they can put on so many hundred pounds; if they have not got it, the car goes empty. It goes so in each case. When that is considered, which pays the greater amount? Has the Senator the figures from the Department, or has that question been looked into by him?

Mr. PLUMB. The question has been looked into of course and has been a subject of consideration. I think that is the view of the Department. Perhaps I ought not to state that, as it is now constituted, but my own investigation satisfies me so far as I have gone. As an offset to that, however, the Government gets from a multitude of small railroads throughout the country a service which is entirely disproportioned to the amount of pay; it gets greater service than it pays for. A railroad that gets $42.75 per mile per annum does not get much more than the price it would get for carrying the employés of the Department; and those are the railroads that are underpaid, while the leading trunk lines from New York to Chicago on both the main channels of travel are getting more in proportion than they get from private parties.

Now, as entering into that question, as one of the essential elements of it, and which must be considered in the final determination of it, is this matter of speed, which was introduced into an appropriation bill first in 1878, and having been once introduced no doubt it will continue; in other words, the people will not give up any advantage they have ever had from the speedy delivery of the mail on account of any question of cost that may intervene. They will want to get it at the lowest price they can; they will demand, and the interests of the Government demand, that there shall be a recasting of the service in order that this new element of speed shall enter into all future contracts, so that when the Government comes to contract with a railroad company to carry the mail it shall consider not only the weight of mail, not only the space to be occupied by the mail, but the speed with which the mail shall be carried. It is these three elements of weight, space, and speed that ought to be the basis of all future contracts for carrying the mails, but under the law as it now stands that cannot be. The law does not provide for the matter of speed except where it has been provided for in this very partial and heretofore unsatisfactory way, simply by a provision putting the amount appropriated in the hands of the Postmaster-General to be expended in his discretion.

It is only fair to say that the service that has been rendered has been of the very best kind. The railroad companies have given to the Government altogether good facilities and a good service, and the question has not been of sufficient importance heretofore to warrant, probably, any legislation on the subject, and would not now specially call for it except that the element of speed will come in, which the country having got the advantage of will not readily, or perhaps at all, relinquish. And meanwhile, also, the great reduction in the cost of the carriage of private freight shows that a reduction ought also to be made in the cost of carrying Government freight.

It was in view of the present partial distribution of these facilities that the committee deemed it proper to increase the amount provided by the House by an addition of $150,000. We believe that will give to New York and to all the country between that and San Francisco largely increased mail facilities; that the time between New York and San Francisco will be shortened twenty-four hours, and that the time between intermediate points will be shortened proportionately. We believe that will give to New Orleans, to Cincinnati, to Saint Louis, and to the sections of country tributary to these cities the advantages comparatively which New York now enjoys of being brought into close connection with the section of country to which their mails chiefly go, and thereby equalize the expenditure in a proper manner. That is the belief of the Department also, although of course the element of cost is not wholly susceptible of demonstration, because it is to be the subject of negotiation and of subsequent contract with the railroad companies.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have listened with very great interest to the clear, lucid statement in support of the amendments to the bill made by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] The immediate amendment under consideration is the one to which I wish to address myself mainly, and it proposes to appropriate "for necessary and special facilities on railroad lines, $650,000; said facilities to be ratably distributed, as near as may be, on railroad lines leading to and from the principal cities in the different sections of the United States."

As stated by the Senator from Kansas, this system of "necessary and special mail facilities" began in 1878, and went along step by step increasing until the 1st of March, 1881, when there was inserted in the Post-Office appropriation bill the following provision:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $425,000.

The present House bill repeats that language except that it inserts the word "mail" before facilities and increases the amount, making for necessary and special mail facilities on trunk lines an appropriation of $500,000. From the beginning in 1878 down to the present time, so far as I know, and so far as the record shows, the principal amount of the various appropriations for this special purpose has been applied to routes leading out of or into New York, and not one dollar, so far as I am able to find from the record, has ever been expended in increasing the speed of the mails on the railroads west of the Mississippi River. It occurred to me that that was not fair, was not right; and therefore when I came to see that Arkansas under the apportionment has increased one member, Iowa two, Kansas four, Missouri one, Nebraska two, and the State in which I live and have the honor in part to represent five; when I came to consider the vast increase that is going on west of the Mississippi River more than in any other part of the Union, and yet that not one dollar has been given in aid of the mail facilities in that section of the country, I thought that was not right, and in that view I gave notice that I would propose an amendment to take $100,000 of the gross appropriation to be applied for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines leading out of Saint Louis, Missouri. That amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I put in Saint Louis, I beg to say to the Senator in charge of the bill, not that I wanted to benefit that city especially or to deprive others of their facilities, but because that is the city with which the State of Texas has more to do than it has with any other city in the Union.

There are two great trunk lines leading out of Saint Louis into Texas, one leading west by way of Sedalia, Missouri, and thence south through the Indian Territory to Denison, Texas, and the other leading by the Iron Mountain Southern road down through the State of Arkansas to Texarkana; and from these two points, Denison and Texarkana, all our mails by rail pass throughout the various portions of the State of Texas. I was of the opinion that it was but just that that section of country west of the river should have some of the benefits as well as the country east of the river; and for that purpose I placed that amendment before the committee. I am gratified that the committee has taken charge of this matter and given it a fair and an honest investigation, and made a fair and an honest distribution; and in view of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, as a matter of course I shall not, if I understand their amendment, and I think I do, as the committee does, propose mine. There is no need now for offering the amendment which I gave notice that I would offer, because this amendment made by the committee covers the point. If I understand the amendment of the committee the use of the term "principal cities" applies to all these great commercial centers, and under that language, as the committee understands, the routes leading out from Saint Louis will receive their ratable proportion as well as the routes leading out of New York. That I understand is the meaning of this language, and I want to put on record the meaning of the committee. Is that correct?

Mr. PLUMB. The committee not only had that in view but they amplified that and emphasized it to the Department; and the language of the amendment was submitted to the Department after it was drawn. There was a concurrence of views on that point, and it is believed the amount will be sufficient. Although the Department would be glad to have a little more, we think, on the whole, they can get through with this amount; and I think the result will be to extend the benefits of this service to all the principal cities of the United States and to the sections of country tributary to them.

Mr. MAXEY. I had no doubt that was the intention of the committee, but I have found by experience that the best way in the world while a bill is on its passage, and while there may be two or three constructions of it, is to have it placed on record so that the debate may go out to have its proper weight in the construction of the law. With that construction this is just, this is fair, this is honest to all sections of the country. It does not give all these benefits to one single city and leave the rest of the country out in the cold. So I shall not offer my amendment, for the reason that the committee, as I conceive, has wisely made an amendment which is in every respect just not only to the country west of the Mississippi River but to Cincinnati, to Louisville, to New Orleans.

Let me say another thing. There has heretofore been no portion of this appropriation expended west of the Mississippi River. To-day we have direct mail connection between San Francisco and the country east passing through my State, and out by Denison up to Saint Louis that way, and by Texarkana and up that way, and by Shreveport down to New Orleans, a direct through route connecting the city of San Francisco and the city of New Orleans by rail through the State of Texas, and by lateral lines connecting the Houston and Galveston; and very soon, by the 1st of July, we shall have another route by way of El Paso and San Antonio and thence to New Orleans. I think it is but just and fair that the benefit of this mail service should be given on those lines as well as the lines to and from New York. So much for that.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas that when the people have got the benefit of mail facilities they will not give them up, and, in my judgment, so long as the Post-Office Department is fairly, wisely, justly, and economically administered they ought not to give up their mail facilities. I believe in their having them. It is right and proper. The people have never objected to that, but they have objected to the fraudulent misapplication of the money which Congress gave for their benefit. That is what they object to, but not to the benefits which they were to receive. Here we give this large amount, over $600,000, for necessary and special facilities on railroad lines. We have given another large amount, reaching now, I think, by one of the Senate committee's amendments, to about $11,000,000, for mail service on railroads generally. That is right. That covers the mail facilities that go over railroads in every portion of this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the lakes to the Gulf, whether on broad-gauge railroads or narrow-gauge railroads or lateral roads, or trunk roads, that is a general appropriation for mail facilities over railways. That is perfectly right. The most difficult of all things, in my judgment, is to frame a post-office law that is not susceptible of being driven around. For instance, we have provided by section 4002 of the Revised Statutes a system of weighing the mails.

SEC. 4002. The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned:

First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed; and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture, in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: on routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200; and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

Mark the language: "not less frequently than once in every four years." There is an option left in the hands of the Government. What is that? If the mails are on the down-grade, as they were during the great panic from 1873 to 1879, then it would be wise on the part of the Government to reweigh the mails, because the matter was decreasing, and the Postmaster-General had a right to reweigh the mails, and thereby reduce the amount paid to the railroad companies; but when the mails are on the up-grade it is unwise and against the interest of the United States to exercise that discretion. Why? Because, as the railroads are paid by weight and you know that the weight of mail-matter carried is constantly increasing, every time you weigh the mails you increase the amount you have to pay for carrying the mails.

The statement which was furnished by the First Assistant Postmaster-General and which was presented here the other day by the Senator from Kansas shows that he took forty principal offices in the United States and made an estimate of the amount of mail matter in the month of February, 1881, and compared that with the amount of mail matter in February, 1882, and the result in those forty towns shows the extraordinary fact that there was an increase of mail matter in that single year at those forty offices of 24½ per cent. Can you not see at once, when a fact of that kind is known, what will be the result when the mails are reweighed? Suppose there is a design to increase the amount which any company gets, for any purpose whatever, over that which under the contract it was authorized to get, how is it attained? The Postmaster-General is not required to weigh the mails except once every four years; but every time he does weigh the mails, when the mails are increasing in weight, it increases the amount of expenditure that goes out of the pockets of the people into the hands of the railroads.

If you take one of these great trunk lines and reweigh the mails you lift up much of that $11,000,000 we are appropriating for the benefit of the mails throughout the whole country on broad-guage, narrow-guage, trunk lines, lateral lines, and all; you take from that gross appropriation just as much as the difference between the amount of weight at the time the contract was made and the mail was weighed and the time you reweigh it, and just that much is added to the pay which these railroads get. In a single year we find that there was an increase from February 7, 1881, to February 7, 1882, of 24½ per cent. in the mail matter at forty offices.

I only call attention to this. I have studied over this matter. I concede that it is most difficult to get at it in such a manner as will be fair and just all around; still it is a matter to which attention should be directed, not that I have the least fear in the world that the Postmaster-General will take any such advantage of this provision, but it is a place where advantage could be taken.

Now, in respect to the point the Senator from Kentucky mentioned in regard to merchandise carried as fourth-class mail matter. As one member of the Senate, the RECORD will show that I never have favored that idea. I have always believed that the mails were created for the purpose of carrying intelligence, according to the word used in the act creating the first post-office ever established in the United States. That was the purpose of it, and I believe it is the object yet, or ought to be the object yet, to carry intelligence; but here we do carry horned frogs, carvings; anything and everything is carried in the way of merchandise. I remember once we had a case here before the Post-Office Committee where it was proven that a man sent out a four-pound package of harness from Boston to some point in Arizona, and the price he had to pay cost him less than wagon transportation from San Francisco to that same point in Arizona. But when you come to meet that, you will find that a great many men representing districts on the frontier away from the express lines will say that any change in that is a change for the benefit of the express companies, and then comes up the grand hue and cry that you are working in the interest of express companies, and not in the interest of the country. I tell you, sir, that when you legislate on these things you will find it the most difficult and most delicate of all the legislation we have to do with here. I have no hesitation in saying openly and outspokenly, as I have put on the record heretofore, that I do not believe in that fourth-class merchandise branch of postal matter. I do not think it is right. While it is a convenience to some, it is a convenience to the few at the expense of the many, who have to make up the loss caused by carrying merchandise through the mail.

There are other points that the Senator from Kansas made which I do not care to speak upon. My principal object was to speak in reference to this particular item. I have done that; and having gotten the understanding which I have, that this is designed by the committee to cover the mails carried out from the principal cities of the Union, and that accomplishes the object I have in view, I will not offer the amendment of which I gave notice, because I think the committee's amendment covers all the points.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the matter in the House bill now sought to be amended by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is perhaps one of the most difficult connected with the Post-Office bill, for a great variety of reasons. This item has grown from $150,000 a year up to $500,000, as proposed by the House, and to $650,000, as proposed by our committee, and there is very great danger, if we keep on extending it, that it will grow and grow until it will become that much addition to all the postal service obtained from the railroads of the country; and we may be prepared perhaps, if we give $650,000 this year, to give $800,000 next year, and a million the next, and more and more to expedite everything as an indirect way of increasing the compensation paid to railroads. There is a danger there, and it is a very serious one.

But it is a matter that has met with very great favor so far as it has been extended, and the effort of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is to extend it to the principal cities of the country. The cities west of the Mississippi have not entirely lost the benefit of the expedition, I will say to the Senator from Texas, and for this reason: the mail that goes out from New York at 4.45 in the morning reaches Chicago twelve hours earlier than any ordinary train could reach there, so that mail matter intended for the West leaves Chicago because close connections are made there for all points in the West.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator will pardon me. I did not intend to convey the idea that it would not expedite the mails to Saint Louis; but after reaching that point there is no expedition now.

Mr. BECK. Except that the mail that goes by the fast line from New York to Saint Louis and Chicago gets there twelve hours earlier than it otherwise would, and thereby facilitates the mail twelve hours earlier to Texas and elsewhere.

Mr. MAXEY. That is true.

Mr. BECK. So there is an indirect advantage obtained in that way; but mail matter coming from west to east does not now obtain that facility.

Mr. MAXEY. The mails now do not get any faster to any point west of Saint Louis.

Mr. BECK. It is only the expedition achieved up to that point and up to Chicago that is beneficial to the country west, but that far it is beneficial. Of course the great New York periodicals go out in the morning fast trains at 4.30, and they go all over the country and get to distant points very much earlier than formerly. One of the ideas we had was to take, for instance, Chicago; if the fast mail can get there in twenty-four hours from New York and reach Chicago by four o'clock next morning, as the present Postmaster-General says can be done, then the fast mail from there will take the Chicago papers to Minneapolis in the Northwest, to Omaha west, and make that a new starting point; and so of Saint Louis. Thus the Chicago and Saint Louis papers will leave in the morning and ramify all over the Northwest and West from there as new points of departure. When we came to consult Mr. Thompson we found that it was one of the most difficult problems perhaps that we had to deal with. For instance, the great railroad running from New York by way of Philadelphia to Washington, and on to Savannah, Georgia, goes at a rate of speed that catches up with the Baltimore train that leaves three hours before it, at some place in North or South Carolina. The people having once obtained these advantages give them up very reluctantly.

The committee, in order to carry out the views of the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Colorado, who had a like amendment with regard to the railroads running to Denver, first thought perhaps we would divide the appropriation so as to require $300,000 to be spent on lines starting from cities west of the Allegheny Mountains, and then we thought that might create embarrassment. We found at last that we could do no better than instruct the Department to divide the money so as to reach each of the great business centers and give everybody as good a chance as could be had. Therefore I have no further amendment to offer to this.

But I want to call the attention of the Senate—though the Senator from Kansas has done it very well—to one fact. While no amendment can be offered by us on the point to which I am about to refer, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] and the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] who are upon the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, must know that there is a great and increasing evil growing out of the fourth-class mail matter, the merchandise which is being carried at such low rates, so that the Government is spending money not to expedite intelligence but to carry merchandise for men who have no claims upon the Government whatever.

There are in New York, as the Senator from Kansas said a little while ago, houses that make a business, to the destruction of the business of all the little villages and towns, to send goods to Arizona in boxes two or three feet square containing ladies' bonnets. They will take a paper box three feet square, though the bonnet weigh but a few ounces, and send it by mail, occupying a space in the car for which for ordinary communication the Government would be entitled to from fifteen to thirty dollars. Not only are these packages carried by rail, but over star routes to any point in the United States for sixty-four cents for a box of four pounds. Why we should be engaged in carrying merchandise for men who are opening stores to sell goods for less freight than they can haul them from San Francisco or from Salt Lake City, or any place fifty or one hundred miles from the point of destination, and why we should pay five dollars for that work and do it for them for sixty-four cents is what I do not understand and do not believe in.

Mr. MAXEY. As I stated before, the RECORD will show that I have never been an advocate of that thing.

Mr. BECK. I know that.

Mr. MAXEY. And I wish to say right here the Senator will find, as he said about increasing mail facilities, that it is not an easy thing to take off any facility that has once existed, because those who have heretofore had that benefit do not want it taken away from them.

Mr. BECK. I know that.

Mr. MAXEY. The case of harness, &c., may be an exception, but that is not the rule by any means. The fourth-class mail-matter transportation is a great convenience to the people, but, as I believe, for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many.

Mr. BECK. It is not only not exceptional, but if the Senator from Texas looks at it he will find that it is growing every day, until it is becoming the business of large houses in New York to attend to that sort of work almost altogether, making those boxes, weighing and putting them up, supplying that character of goods. I do not propose to strike it off altogether; that is not my idea; but why a box two or three feet square should go for sixty-four cents to Arizona or any other Territory, I cannot see. I name Arizona only because there was a case there where a bridge was washed away, and some merchants complained that they had not got their goods in time, and when the matter came to be looked into it was found that the trouble was only in regard to these boxes that it would have taken three or four coaches to carry. It is not fair for the Government to charge a man from New York to Yonkers or New York to Albany sixty-four cents to carry a box three feet square containing merchandise, and deliver the same box to the remotest part of Arizona for sixty-four cents. The Post-Office Committee had better consider this matter. Why not charge according to distance? Why not say one cent per ounce or sixteen cents a pound for the first five hundred or thousand miles, two cents an ounce or thirty-two cents a pound for two thousand miles, and so on, so as to give the Government of the United States something like the cost. The Post-Office Department may ascertain what the cost is.

Mr. COKE. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky if there is anything in this bill to regulate that?

Mr. BECK. There is not. I did not propose any further amendment, because the Committee on Appropriations have had enough abuse from men at both ends of this Capitol for originating legislation; but in inquiring into this service this fact was developed that three postal cars are run out of New York at 4.45 o'clock a. m. to Buffalo, when but for that expedited fourth-class matter one car would do, or two cars, at the outside, would be all that would be required; and the third car is carried on and expedited, and the great bulk of this $500,000 that we are required to give in addition to the ordinary pay for railroad service is paid for expedition of harness and bonnets and machinery and things that we are carrying on the average at a cost of five times the amount the senders are paying the United States. Why should boots and shoes and bonnets and harness, and all the things that go into a dry-goods store in Arizona have an extra postal car with expedition? That is what part of the $500,000 we are now giving goes for, and Louisville, Cincinnati, Chicago, Saint Louis, and all the great cities of the West cannot get their mail matter sent out with expedition, because it requires all the $500,000 we give to carry the expedited cars from the pivotal point of New York, when perhaps one-third and very frequently one-half of the expedition is on boxes that could stay a week, instead of being hurried up four or five hours in advance.

That is the law now, and the Department is applied to to carry them, but you have either got to stop the expedition altogether or carry all the mail matter that is brought to the office. That is the reason I am calling the attention of the Senate to the importance of changing it and excluding the fourth-class matter from the expedited cars, so that one car or two cars will do all the work from New York to Chicago instead of three or four, and then use all the money thus saved to expedite the service from Chicago to Saint Paul and to Omaha, and from Saint Louis to Kansas City, and from Cincinnati through my own State to Atlanta and Jackson and New Orleans, and from Louisville by the Louisville and Nashville road to Nashville and the connecting points.

That is the object I have in making the suggestions I am doing. I believe we have gone as far as we can. I know we cannot stop it altogether, and I do not know that I want to stop the fourth-class matter altogether, because, as the Senator from Texas very well says, the moment we propose it everybody interested in fourth-class matter, in getting his merchandise through, and every newspaper he can hire will prove to the satisfaction of themselves and everybody that believes them that the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate are bought and paid for by the express companies, and that it is all done in the interest of the express companies, and that we are working in their interest to injure the poor people. That is the cry that comes up all the time from those who are getting their things through the mail, and we are making great companies rich by doing it. I agree with the Senator from Texas about that. I am willing they shall abuse me as much as they like on that subject. The Government of the United States ought not to carry merchandise for less than it costs the Government of the United States to carry it; and if it is going to carry it at all, it should require the cost of the carriage to be paid, and the Post-Office committees of the House and the Senate and the Post-Office Department ought to so arrange it that they shall require the men who demand the carriage of merchandise to pay what it costs the United States to carry it. If you do that with fourth-class matter, the Post-Office Department of the United States will be self-sustaining and will not require a dollar out of the Treasury, and you can expedite all the mails that carry first, second, and third class matter all through the country, and then give those people who demand the carriage of merchandise in the mails the right to have it carried on paying the cost. Pass a law giving the Department power and making it their duty to ascertain the exact cost and to carry it at the lowest possible rate, asking no profit; but do not pay out of the pockets of the people to carry harness or boots or shoes or bonnets to a store in Arizona to sell to their people for less than other dealers can sell the same things for who haul them by wagons or by express companies or by ordinary freight.

The Senator from Texas called attention to the fact that mails were weighed when there was no compulsion on the Department to weigh them. They have been, and they have been weighed in my judgment wrongfully, and not for the good of the service. Last October they were weighed on the New York Central, they were weighed on the Pennsylvania road, and other roads, when they were not required by law to be weighed and when the Post-Office Department ought to have known that the weighing would increase the cost to the United States, as it has increased it very largely. It was not a proper thing to do. In that I agree with the Senator; but we cannot help that. It was a matter of discretion with the Postmaster-General. I do not think he exercised it wisely when he knew the business was increasing every month; but that was done.

Mr. MAXEY. The point I want to make right there is this, and the Senator from Kentucky has struck it. Here we give a specific amount for special mail facilities. Now, there is a statute, and a very wise one, that no money shall be applied to any purpose other than that for which it is appropriated. Very well. Now, by this weighing the devil is whipped around the stump. You want to pay men an additional price for expediting the mail. You cannot do it out of the money appropriated for that, for that is all expended; but what do you do? Reweigh the mail and take out forty, fifty, or one hundred thousand dollars from the general fund for all the railways of the United States and give it under the pretense of reweighing the mail for expediting lines. I say if we can cure that we ought to do it.

Mr. BECK. I say so too, and I do hope the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads will go to the extent of their power to try to prevent these evils from occurring. The Committee on Appropriations cannot do it, and we are going further now than we ought to in making the effort we are to get a general equitable distribution. We do legislate sometimes when we have no right to do it, but it is only to a limited extent, not reaching the evils at all that I want to reach, not reaching the evils which I know ought to be reached in preventing the Postmaster-General from weighing the mails at times when he ought not. The Postmaster-General is weighing now under an arrangement made before the present Postmaster-General came into office. He is going thereby to increase 24 per cent. the cost of carrying our mails on railways. It is all wrong; but I do not propose to go into that. All I rose for was to call attention to the fact that something ought to be done with the fourth-class matter, and it ought to be done speedily, and when done it will save this Government an immense amount of money, will do nobody any harm, and will in my judgment prevent us from having to make any appropriation at all out of the General Treasury to support the Post Office establishment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my colleague on the committee allow me to ask him whether he has thought of a remedy for this? I agree with what he has said about the evil; but has he thought of a remedy? and, if he has, I hope the Post-Office Committee will listen to him.

Mr. BECK. My remedy is not to cut it off, but to have the Post-Office Department thoroughly investigate this subject and make men who send fourth-class matter, merchandise, pay precisely what it costs the Government to carry it; and when that is done the revenues will be greatly increased or the expenses greatly diminished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 123, to increase the appropriation "for compensation to railway post-office clerks" from $1,650,000 to $1,700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 125, to increase the appropriation "for route agents" from $1,375,000 to $1,555,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I have in my hand a letter from the Postmaster-General transmitting a letter from the superintendent of the railway mail service explaining the necessity for this increase. I desire to say on behalf of the committee that there are two elements that enter into this increase. One is the necessary increase of the service by reason of the extension of railway lines, and the other and more important is that the salaries may be put up beyond the point at which they now are.

From time to time during the last three or four years, as the service has been extended and as it has outrun the appropriation, the Department has been in the habit of charging the expenses of that service to the route agents. Whenever the appropriation ran out the salaries of the employés were cut down in order to extend the service.

I have here a table which will show the rates now paid. The committee believe that those salaries ought to be increased, and they add to this appropriation $130,000 in order that the Postmaster-General may put the pay of route agents in the service up to $1,000 per annum. The pay now ranges from $720 to $960. The maximum pay permitted by law is $1,080.

There is a distinction between route agents and mail-route messengers, mail-route messengers being a class of employés running less than ninety miles a day.

There is no more faithful class of employés than these route agents; no class who work harder, no class who bring to the discharge of their duties more intelligence, more judgment, more character, more hard labor of every kind which inures to the benefit of the Government and tends to the efficiency of the service than they do. They are upon their feet during all the day. They are exposed to the accidents and contingencies of the service of a kind which do not attach to the ordinary employé. During the last year several of them were killed, and a much larger number were seriously injured while in the line of their duty. And to meet the very proper demand these employés make for increase of compensation $130,000 was added.

I make these remarks, not that I doubt that the Senate will promptly vote the increase, but in order that the Department may be advised of the judgment and expectation of the committee and of the Senate in adding to the appropriation.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to this additional reason: not only has the number of miles of railway been very largely increased within the last twelve months, but they are constantly being increased, and this bill is providing for the ensuing fiscal year. Therefore there is a necessity for having an appropriation commensurate with the probable business of the country.

Mr. PLUMB. I will send up to be inserted in the RECORD the letter I referred to.

The letter is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following statement:

The estimate for railway post-office clerks for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, is $1,650,000, which is $100,000 greater than the appropriation for the present fiscal year was before the passage of the deficiency bill which was rendered necessary by the unexpected increase of the mail growing out of the rapid development of business all over the country. The deficiency appropriation for this branch of the service for the present fiscal year was $40,000, which became available about the 1st of March and is to be expended in the remaining four months of the year. The increased force thus provided for will cost for the next year about one hundred thousand dollars, so that the estimate previously made will not admit of any increase of the force over the number appointed under this year's deficiency appropriation. The natural growth of the country and the extension of railroads now in process of construction will necessarily demand an increased number of railway postal clerks to handle the mails properly, and I would therefore respectfully request that you increase the estimate for railway postal clerks for 1883 from $1,650,000 to $1,700,000.

The same considerations apply to the appropriation for route agents, which for the present fiscal year was increased by the recent immediate deficiency act by $45,000; namely, $35,000 transferred from the mail-route messenger fund, and $10,000 appropriated outright. This, in view of the fact that a portion of the present fiscal year had expired, would increase the appropriation at a ratio greater than the estimate for the next fiscal year, and the mail-route messenger is correspondingly decreased. Considering the two appropriations together their net increase for the next fiscal year as estimated was $115,000, which, in my opinion, will not be sufficient to continue the service as now established and provide for the necessary increase in the next fiscal year. I would therefore recommend that the appropriation for the next fiscal year for route agents be increased from $1,375,000 to $1,425,000. The authority to employ route agents is found in section 4024 of the Revised Statutes, which fixes their salaries at not less than nine hundred and not more than twelve hundred dollars per annum. These limits were first fixed by the act of January 22, 1867, (14 Statutes, page 378.) Prior to that time the usual salary of route agents was $900 per annum, but at that time the pay of all those who made a daily average run of one hundred miles or more was increased to $1,080 per annum, and continued at that rate until 1876, when the amount appropriated was insufficient to maintain their salaries at this rate without a reduction of the force, which could not be made. Since that time the salaries of route agents have been gradually reduced (as the appropriations made it necessary) from $1,080 per annum to the following sums:

Route agents in the service March 7, 1882:

134 at $1,000 per annum, cost to increase to $1,080	$10,720
3 at $980 per annum, cost to increase to $1,080	300
8 at $960 per annum, cost to increase to $1,080	960
52 at $940 per annum, cost to increase to $1,080	7,280
27 at $920 per annum, cost to increase to $1,080	4,320
1,245 at $900 per annum, cost to increase to $1,080	224,100
Total	247,680

It will thus be seen that it will cost $247,680 to increase the salaries of all route agents to $1,080 per annum.

I find that to increase the salaries of employés on route agents' lines, who now receive less than that amount, to $1,000 per annum, will cost for the next fiscal year $130,160 in addition to the amount already estimated for. In case it is the desire of Congress to equalize the salaries upon route agents' lines, I would respectfully recommend that this amount be added to the appropriation for 1883, making a total for route agents of $1,555,160.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. THOMPSON,
General Superintendent.

Hon. T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 131, to increase the appropriation "for mail messengers" from $800,000 to $850,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "office of Third Assistant Postmaster-General," after the word "dollars," in line 142, to strike out the following clause:

And hereafter no official stamps shall be manufactured or supplied to any of the Departments, or to any officer of the United States, but all correspondence on official business shall be transmitted in penalty envelopes.

Mr. MAXEY. I trust——

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me first to explain the purpose of that amendment?

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to understand it. I think it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. There were two objections to this clause of the House bill. The first was that it would be impracticable in at least one Department of the Government, that is the War Department. A large proportion of postage paid by the War Department is for the transmission by mail of the proceedings of courts-martial. These proceedings are very voluminous and they will occupy the space of an ordinary valise almost always. The postage on them varies from a dollar to two or three dollars. It would be practically impossible to insert a package of that kind in a penalty envelope or to provide envelopes of a size which would transmit that class of matter. This clause prohibits the issue of official stamps of all kinds. Therefore, packages of that kind would have to be transmitted at the expense of the judge-advocate or of some other officer of the Government having charge of the records.

But the most serious objection to this clause was that it seems to extend the use of the penalty envelopes to all officers of the United States. The language is:

> And hereafter no official stamps shall be manufactured or supplied to any of the Departments, or to any officer of the United States, but all correspondence on official business shall be transmitted in penalty envelopes.

It may be a very innocuous provision, but it may be a very sweeping one, and we thought it would not be very wise to extend the franking privilege by implication at least, that if it was to be done it ought to be done upon an amendment for that purpose and with a fair intent.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas who has charge of this bill if the system works well in one Department why it should not be extended to the other Departments? It is not only a question of convenience but it is a question of economy. It costs much less to put the penalty clause on the envelopes than to make the stamps.

Mr. PLUMB. It is an advantage possibly to have it extended to some of the Departments; but there are some very curious results about this use of penalty envelopes to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. The first limitation upon the use of postage-stamps was found in the appropriation bill of 1878, I think, which provided that thereafter the secretaries of the several Departments should have the right to use penalty envelopes. The apparent purpose of that was to cut down the appropriation for official stamps, and it was cut down. I have in my hand a table showing the appropriations made for postage for the different Departments of the Government from 1877 down to the present year. In 1877 the State Department had appropriated $20,000. There was a gross sum which Congress understood and intended was to be applied to the payment of postage by the State Department, but in 1878 there was no money appropriated to pay postage for the State Department; and penalty envelopes, the use of which had been provided for, and the use of which is wholly without any control by Congress, came in and supplanted the appropriation for postage. In 1879 it was the same, and in 1880; but in 1881 they got $5,000, in 1882 $2,500, and for the present year they have estimated for the same amount.

The Treasury Department, in 1877, had appropriated $100,000 for postage; in 1878, $200,000; in 1879, the same; in 1880, the same; in 1881, by the use of penalty envelopes, the amount was reduced down to $20,000; in 1882 it was the same, and in 1883 the amount estimated for is $1,500.

The War Department used, in 1877, $80,612; in 1878, $80,000; in 1879, $80,000; in 1880, $165,000; in 1881, $140,000; in 1882, $140,000; and for 1883 the estimate is $140,000. In the War Department postage is accounted for as property. Postage-stamps are issued to quartermasters of the military divisions, departments, and so on, and are in turn issued to officers of the Government who are entitled to have their postage paid by the Government, and they are taken up upon their returns as so much property, and the expenditure accounted as for property used in the public service, so that the Department is able to see not only what the postage costs in gross but what each officer uses, and what he uses it for, which simply takes the place of the old practice of an officer who made an expenditure for postage carrying it as cash expended for the Government into his voucher, and getting his pay back from the quartermaster who pays the voucher.

In addition to that, as I said before, it is a question of convenience. It cannot be possible that penalty envelopes of the different sizes necessary to carry on the correspondence of the War Department could be economically provided. Take, for instance, the providing an envelope of the size necessary to take in a sack that would carry a bushel of wheat, and sending it to the different judge-advocates of courts-martial.

In addition to that, I doubt somewhat the wisdom of this disuse of official postage-stamps. It is a wise thing to keep all questions of expenditures within the knowledge of Congress. In 1879 the total appropriation for postage was $1,041,000, and I have no doubt to-day that if all the Departments of the Government were to pay in cash the price of postage which individuals pay the Post-Office Department would be self-sustaining. That year the Post-Office Department got $700,000; to-day I have no doubt its postage is at the rate of more than $1,000,000 a year. We are charging to the Post-Office Department the matter carried for the various Departments without knowing anything about what it costs to carry it, and complaining that the Post-Office Department is not self-sustaining.

Our attention has also been called to complaints made as to the cost of providing official stamps. For the purpose of showing that there is nothing in that, I will say that the entire cost of the printing of the official stamps printed and used last year was $184.

The War Department purchases stationery in Chicago for the use of the military division of the Mississippi. If it were to furnish penalty envelopes, it would have to authorize the general in command of that military division to order the printing of penalty envelopes, and therefore put it beyond the control of the Department entirely, or else they would have to be printed at Washington and transmitted to Chicago, and so all envelopes would practically have to be supplied from the headquarters of the Army in the city of Washington. In various ways, in these ways as well as others, this would result in very great inconvenience to the Department, and would be of very doubtful utility to the Government, and, as we think, would extend improperly the use of penalty envelopes.

Mr. MAXEY. I think the Senate ought to look very carefully before they adopt this amendment. I happen to know that the measure now sought to be repealed by the Appropriations Committee underwent a careful and searching investigation in the Post-Office Committee, and after the most mature deliberation by that committee they reported to the Senate a bill, two sections of which are in the act of March 3, 1877, the fifth and sixth sections of that act:

> SEC. 5. That it shall be lawful to transmit through the mail, free of postage, any letters, packages, or other matters relating exclusively to the business of the Government of the United States: Provided, That every such letter or package to entitle it to pass free shall bear over the words "official business" an indorsement showing also the name of the Department, and, if from a bureau or office, the names of the Department and bureau or office, as the case may be, whence transmitted. And if any person shall make use of any such official envelope to avoid the payment of postage on his private letter, package, or other matter in the mail, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.
> SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying this act into effect, it shall be the duty of each of the Executive Departments of the United States to provide for itself and its subordinate offices the necessary envelopes; and in addition to the indorsement designating the Department in which they are to be used, the penalty for the unlawful use of these envelopes shall be stated thereon.

That went along for two years and worked well. The committee saw that where the postage was paid by a mere ordinary stamp the stamps when given out might be used for the purpose of being put on private letters, when the intention of the Government was that they should only go upon official documents. In lieu thereof the penalty envelope was adopted and directed to be used. In the first place the superscription upon the envelope itself destroyed that envelope for any practical use, and, besides, if any man used that in sending private communications he thereby placed himself under the control of the man to whom he sent the letter and subjected himself to the liability of prosecution, conviction, and fine for the violation of the law.

That went along, I say, until 1879, and the Senate on the 3d of March, 1879, extended the provisions because it was found to work well, and the twenty-ninth section of that act says:

> The provisions of the fifth and sixth sections of the act entitled "An act establishing post-routes, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, for the transmission of official mail matter, be, and they are hereby, extended to all officers of the United States Government, and made applicable to all official mail matter transmitted between any of the officers of the United States or between any such officer and either of the Executive Departments or officers of the Government, the envelopes of such matter in all cases to bear appropriate indorsements containing the proper designation of the office from which the same is transmitted, with a statement of the penalty for their misuse. And the provisions of said fifth and sixth sections are hereby likewise extended and made applicable to all official mail matter sent from the Smithsonian Institution: Provided, That this act shall not extend or apply to pension agents or other officers who receive a fixed allowance as compensation for their services, including expenses for postage.

Originally, as I stated, the act of March 3, 1877, was passed. The purpose which the Post-Office Committee had was to stop a leak, and a bad leak, and after the most mature consideration of the matter in the committee week after week they fell upon this as the best thing they could do in the interest of the Government. It has worked well for five years. Some few cases are mentioned by the Senator from Kansas (I must confess I never heard of them before) where a Department would have an amount of matter to fill a wheat sack, I believe he called it. That is something new to me. I venture to say that out of a thousand packages sent from the various Departments and bureaus of this Government nine hundred and ninety-nine will go in such envelopes as may be found of convenient size, and the exceptional cases would not change the general principle.

This is the view which the Post-Office Committee had in recommending this legislation to Congress which was adopted five years ago and which has worked well. I do not think it wise policy upon the sudden to spring a repeal in this way of laws which, so far as I know, have given satisfaction, and certainly are good, sound laws in the interest of wise economy.

Mr. FERRY. I want to add to what has been said by my colleague on the Post-Office Committee, and to remind the Senator from Kansas of a fact which has escaped his attention. The Government is now at the expense of providing envelopes; it costs but a trifle more to add the penalty clause upon the envelope, and it has been found by the Department to be an economical mode of transmitting all the official matter of the Department. It works well for the Post-Office Department, and is commended by the Postmaster-General for other Departments. Some of the Departments do not use them, but insist upon using stamps instead, and it proves more costly, and the Government suffers considerably from the practice, while in the case of the penalty envelopes I believe there have been few if any instances of loss; I know of no instance brought to my attention of the fraudulent use of the penalty envelope. This being the case, and it being approved by one Department as working well for the last five years, it ought to be used by the other Departments of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want to occupy time in discussion, but the Senator from Texas seems to have the idea that we propose to repeal the law which now provides for penalty envelopes.

Mr. MAXEY. That is the effect of it by striking out the House clause.

Mr. ALLISON. Nothing is further from the intention of the committee. We only propose to strike out here the provision which prohibits the use of official stamps by the Departments. Penalty envelopes are used now in all the Departments everywhere, and they are a great convenience and will continue. Nobody proposes to disturb their use.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the clause to see whether he is correct in that statement. It reads:

> And hereafter no official stamps shall be manufactured or supplied—

He is right that far—> to any of the Departments, or to any officer of the United States, but all correspondence on official business shall be transmitted in penalty envelopes.

Why strike that out?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, but the law stands——

Mr. MAXEY. The law will then be that they shall not be transmitted so.

Mr. ALLISON. My friend from Texas is too good a lawyer not to know that the statutes he read still remain in force. The object of this House provision is that no official stamps shall be used. Now, what do these stamps cost? Our committee made inquiry of the Post-Office Department. They cost $184 per annum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many stamps do you get for that?

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot state the number of stamps; we get a great number. They are printed for each Department. The Senator from Kansas stated very distinctly why the War Department must have these stamps. They must either have stamps of their own, or we must make an appropriation for stamps each year for the Departments. The Interior Department sent a letter to the committee, which it is not necessary to take the time of the Senate to read, disclosing the fact that if this provision is to stand it will need $10,000 from the Treasury for the purpose of paying for stamps; and let me call attention to some of the reasons why this is necessary.

Mr. BECK. Did the Senator from Iowa state that all we propose to strike out is new matter, so that we only propose to leave the law as it stands exactly?

Mr. ALLISON. I tried to so state, and tried to make my friend from Texas so understand. Now the Interior Department, for instance, is receiving correspondence from every part of the country. A man writes a letter to the Secretary of the Interior upon official business, about his pension, his patent, or whatever, and he puts a three-cent stamp on it when in fact there ought to be a nine-cent or a twelve-cent stamp on it. But it goes to the Interior Department through the post-office, and the local postmaster here charges the Interior Department with the deficiency in postage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But why does not the Secretary of the Interior pay it out of his own pocket just as we do when similar letters are sent to us?

Mr. ALLISON. That is a most pertinent question, and I am glad to know that my friend is sitting in his place and has an amendment ready to cure that evil, and I shall vote for it when it comes up. Now, the Secretary of the Interior, not being obliged to do as we are obliged to do, put our hands in our pockets and pay the extra postage, is allowed to take these official stamps and attach them to these letters or hand them over to the local postmaster in this city, and thus secure a credit for this underpaid matter of the letters. That is one class of cases.

The Attorney-General has decided that a very large number of public officers under the law are not permitted to use penalty envelopes at all; so that unless the present legal provision about official postage-stamps is continued a large number of public officers cannot use the penalty envelopes. So there is a distinction there between one class of officers and another class of officers, and this provision does not remedy that.

If this provision is to remain—and of course the committee have no special objection to its remaining in the bill except that which applies to every Senator—it will be necessary to appropriate for every Department of the Government a specific sum for post-office stamps. The Secretary of the Interior will not pay five or six thousand dollars per annum out of his own pocket for the purpose of paying postage on matter sent to him, neither will the head of the War Department, nor any other of the great Departments of this Government. Therefore, if we do not allow the use of official stamps we must make appropriations of public money to pay for these letters, or else we must do as Senators are obliged to do, require the heads of Departments to pay the extra amount of postage out of their own pockets.

I know the penalty envelope is a matter very dear to some gentlemen on the Post-Office Committee, and I was in favor of it, and should be glad to favor its universal use now if it was a practicable method; but it is not, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations thought it best to strike out this clause and leave the law where it is now. I hear no complaint of it. Does anybody tell me that any officer of this Government fraudulently uses official stamps? Have you ever heard of an instance of it? I never have. No complaint has been made.

The whole cost of these official envelopes is $184 per annum, and they are a great convenience to every Department of the Government; therefore we ought to let the present legal provision stand until we can make a better one.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Iowa is right in saying that this clause does not seek to repeal the present laws; but let me remind him that under existing law stamps are used and the penalty envelopes also; it is not regarded as mandatory which. The object of this clause of the House bill is to compel the Departments to use penalty envelopes instead of stamps.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. FERRY. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from Kansas, in charge of this bill, a few minutes since said that it only cost $184, and now the Senator from Iowa says that the Interior Department has to pay some $5,000 for these stamps. Whatever the amount, it is simply appropriating out of the Treasury of the United States for the use of another Department of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I have been exceedingly dull, I know I must have been if the Senator so misunderstood me. I said the Interior Department would be obliged to pay some $5,000 out of their fund for the purpose of paying this postage. It now uses $5,000 of these official stamps for the purpose of paying postage undercharged and debited to it in the local offices per annum. If it cannot pay it by these official stamps, how can it pay it? Can it pay it with penalty envelopes, I ask the Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads? Suppose there is a charge in the local post-office here against the Interior Department of $1,000 for postage not paid by the senders of letters.

Mr. FERRY. Then the result will be as in private correspondence; the letters will be sent, and the receiver of the letters pays. Were penalty-envelopes used, as they should be, this contingency would not occur.

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. FERRY. Why not? This is official business coming to one Department of the Government.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee understood very well that this clause of the House bill was aimed at an abuse, an abuse in the use of official postage-stamps; but we believed that the abuse to result would be the other way. Somebody has got to pay this postage. As the Senator from Iowa has well said, the Interior Department has got to pay the postage for matter it receives on which postage is not fully paid. In addition to that there is a class of cases which the Secretary of the Interior refers to which is covered by his letter that I will send up and have inserted in the RECORD, in which he makes inquiry of unofficial people in regard to the business of his office.

He desires to make an inquiry at a remote point as to timber depredations. He has a large correspondence of that kind. He feels himself constrained to send to persons from whom he desires information a stamped envelope or an envelope which will enable that person to send a reply without cost to himself. He does not feel that his correspondent ought to be imposed upon. He therefore must send to him a stamp. What kind of a stamp does he send? Of course the inevitable conclusion of the argument of the Senator from Michigan is that he shall send him an unofficial stamp, which he must buy at the post-office. Stamps of that kind can be picked up and disposed of and misused with twice the facility that an official stamp can, because an official stamp has upon it the official designation of the Department for which it is printed, and a penalty for its use attached besides, so that an employé of the Post-Office Department cannot take a stamp issued to the Post-Office Department and sell it to a grocery-store as he could an ordinary stamp that the Secretary might be obliged to purchase and keep in his drawer for the uses I have mentioned.

In addition to that the Secretary of the Interior says he is obliged to register large numbers of packages, and place upon them stamps, or in some other way pay the postage. He says, if we do not give him the official stamps for this purpose we have got to give him the money and authorize him to pay the registration fee These are packages which he can not get into the penalty envelope, large packages, and the penalty envelope does not cover the registration fee. There are cases arising in all, or a number of the Departments, which this clause, put in by the House as new legislation, absolutely and entirely defeats. The general purpose the Post-Office Committee have in view in throwing all sorts of safeguards around the use of official stamps and penalty envelopes the Committee on Appropriations realize fully and will be just as glad to accomplish as they. The only trouble is to make up our amendments to meet this clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now send up the letter of the Secretary of the Interior to which I have referred, to be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 2, 1882.

SIR: Observing that in the Post-Office appropriation bill, which passed the House on the 25th ultimo, provision is made that "hereafter no official stamps shall be supplied to any of the Departments, or any officer of the United States, but all correspondence on official business shall be transmitted in penalty envelopes," I beg to call your attention to the fact that this Department has occasion to send a large number of valuable packages by registered mail through the Post-Office, the postage upon which is paid by official stamps, the law requiring the payment of ten cents postage upon every such package. What is true of this Department is, I suppose, true of each of the other executive Departments of the Government.

Should the supply to the Department of official stamps be discontinued, it will be necessary, in order to the transmission of registered official packages, that provision be made for their transmission free of charge, or that an appropriation be made for ordinary United States postage-stamps sufficient to cover the expense incident to the registration of such packages.

I have also to call your attention to the further fact that in very many cases letters are addressed by the Department and its several bureaus and offices to private parties, which letters require or solicit a reply. By the decision of the Postmaster-General, and also of the Attorney-General, such replies cannot under existing provisions of law be returned to the Department or bureau in penalty envelopes, though an envelope bearing the official stamp of the Department may be inclosed in which said reply may be returned. It has, therefore, been the custom of the Department and its several bureaus to inclose such stamped envelopes to be used by private parties returning replies to official correspondence, as it has not been deemed just to require said parties to pay postage on matter of an official character thus solicited.

It has also been decided by the Attorney-General that officers of the Government not "departmental in their character," for example, Indian agents, registers and receivers of land offices, &c., are not entitled to use penalty envelopes for the transmission of mail matter to private persons, even though it be strictly official in its character, so that said officers have been therefore obliged to use official postage stamps or pay postage upon official correspondence from their own personal funds. (See opinion of the Attorney-General herewith inclosed.)

Furthermore, the Department has been accustomed to pay with official stamps the bills for over-due postage presented from time to time by the postmaster of the city, amounting in the aggregate to nearly $1,000 per annum. No appropriation available for this purpose has been made for the Department.

I call attention to these points in order that some provision meeting the requirements of these several cases may be made in the bill before it is reported by your committee to the Senate.

Should it be deemed best to discontinue entirely the supply of official postage stamps, it is estimated that the sum of $10,000 will be required for the ensuing fiscal year to meet the expense for postage for the Department consequent upon such discontinuance.

Very respectfully,

S. J. KIRKWOOD,
Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the same paragraph out of which words have just been stricken by inserting in line 142 after the word "dollars:"

And the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall have power to use official envelopes, prepared by themselves, for all the official business of their respective offices; and the use of every such envelope for any purpose other than such official business shall be punished by the same penalties imposed by law for the illegal use of such envelopes already existing. And each member of the Senate and member of the House of Representatives and each Delegate from a Territory shall have the right to send through the mail any letter or packet containing only printed or written matter, not exceeding two ounces in weight, identified by his autograph signature, without the payment of postage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know that I understand the amendment exactly, but I suppose it is a proposition to give the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House a right to send matter appertaining to public business under these envelopes. In fact it is the franking privilege restored, I am told.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It provides two things on which I should be glad to have the yeas and nays if it did not take too much time to call them. It provides that the two executive officers of the two Houses of Congress shall have the right to communicate with the people of the United States on public business just as the other officers of the other Departments of the Government do. Second, it provides that each Senator, Member of the House of Representatives, and Delegate shall have the right to send through the mail, without the payment of postage, any letter or package containing only written or printed matter, (not boots and shoes and washing, &c., as the newspapers have been talking about,) that does not weigh more than two ounces.

I will state what I have said so often before, that whatever newspapers may say or whatever anybody else may say, I believe it is not only just to the public interests and the transaction of official business by Senators and Members, but as to business that is not technically official, like many letters that I get and answer every day, as all Senators do, concerning public affairs, bills that affect public interests, like the Mormon bill, the Chinese bill, the tariff-commission bill, and that enable Senators as it is their duty if they are the representatives of republican constituencies to inform the people who are our masters and we are their servants what is the state of these public questions at the public expense if it be a public expense to send these two ounces over a railroad that has its annual contract by the ton if you take the great ones and in the other cases it does not make any difference at all.

That is the proposition, and that is all I wish to say about it.

Mr. FERRY. This proposition has been before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I was about to say, under a resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont, but on second thought I believe it was the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.] The committee considered the question and believed it would be a revival of the franking privilege with all its abuses, and reported adversely to the proposition.

The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is that upon the signature of any member of this Senate, or Member or Delegate of the House of Representatives, official business shall go through the mails free of postage. Who is to determine the character of the official business so transmitted?

Now, the practical result of such an amendment will be that for convenience and economy of time members will prepare envelopes by the package with their signatures affixed; then they somehow are more or less used by others and for other purposes than that designed by the writer of the signature. It will be the same abuse under the old franking privilege, and therefore I am unwilling to revive a system by which so much abuse may be occasioned and so much loss result to the revenues of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Michigan sign any such packages and leave them with his clerks or anybody else? I do not believe he will, and there is no Senator in this body, there is no Member of the House of Representatives or Delegate who will so betray the trust that is reposed in him as to do anything of the kind.

Next, I wish to say that the abuse which the Senator from Michigan speaks of as to the old franking privilege according to my observation—and it has covered now fifteen or sixteen years—was very much less than the abuse of this very official stamp and envelope business that the Senator is defending. In all the time of what was called the franking privilege, so far as my name went, I never detected or heard of but one instance where in the case of an envelope that had my name on it, that had in it when it was put on a document to be sent to a constituent, (and that the law allows now,) that document was taken out, and some messenger or somebody about the Capitol used it for another purpose; and I found it out. That is one instance. This very session there have more than a half a dozen official envelopes with all the penalty clauses upon them, come to me inclosing matter that had nothing to do with the public service. You may say that I am deserving of reproach because I did not turn detective and go and inform against the man who sent them if I knew who it was. Perhaps I am entitled to reproach on that account, but I did not do it, and it is not my special and particular business to operate as a detective of the Post-Office Department.

The talk therefore about the fact that nobody can be trusted in this country unless he is somebody else than a Senator or Representative is an amazing mistake. The frauds and the wrongs that were committed under the old franking privilege, so far as Senators and Members were concerned, were infinitely less then than they were in the other Departments; and the frauds and the wrongs now, (and they are not great, they are a very small percentage that are committed under this official stamp business,) are greater than they were in my opinion, according to my observation and information, when the heads of Departments and bureaus were required to put their name to every envelope that went out. Everybody can see that philosophically that would be so from the nature of things. No matter, it saves the labor of these autographic signatures by the heads of the Departments; and if there are some little frauds it is like everything else. You cannot have a well-organized church long without having some wrong coming into it. You cannot have a Treasury Department or a Senate or anything in this human world of ours that has not the drawback of some failure; and yet the Senator says the only people who are to be suspected who are to stand up to the public gaze as those who will cheat the public Treasury, are the Senators and Representatives in Congress. They cannot communicate to their constituents on public business as every bureau officer may; they must pay their own postage.

Mr. President, I am willing to take whatever fate may come by voting manfully for this proposition.

Mr. FERRY. I know the Senator from Vermont would not designedly or intentionally affix his signature to an envelope which was to carry through the mails any matter that was not authorized by law, nor would any other Senator or Member of the House of Representatives; I am only striving to recall what did occur under the former franking privilege, and to emphasize that it was true that letters were transmitted in that illegal way, but how the signatures were affixed or appeared and their use followed I leave for other Senators to judge of as well as myself. I say to the Senator from Vermont that while wrong is incidental to almost every method in this life, there was so great a wrong connected with the franking privilege that the result was a crying demand throughout the country that the law be repealed, and the resultant fact was that the law was repealed, by the judgment of Congress that the practice should no longer be tolerated by the statutes. I am simply recalling history, and to admonish others that this will inevitably be the result. That admonition must not be disregarded.

If we reinstate the franking law or give this privilege proposed by the amendment the same abuse will likely follow, and I cannot be a party to it. No Senator would intend to abuse the privilege; and yet I cannot ignore notable experience. My observation regarding the penalty envelopes that have been sent to me is somewhat different from that of the Senator from Vermont. I never have had any such envelopes sent me covering unofficial matter, and I have had many from Departments, especially from the Pension Office of the Interior Department. I never received one inclosing any other than official business, and it was under the law authorizing them that they were doubtless sent to many Senators. In that respect the experience of the Senator from Vermont has been different from mine.

If the privilege proposed by the amendment of that Senator is restored it might prove a great convenience to every member of Congress and to the Secretary of this body, and to the Clerk of the House, but the abuse which past experience assures will attend that convenience overrides all accruing benefits, and I believe the people will not indorse its restoration. At all events I cannot give my support to the proposition, and protest against this proposed restoration of the franking privilege, believing it fraught with manifold abuses and material loss to the public revenues. This is my deliberate judgment, and I shall adhere to it and abide public judgment.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us take a vote on this question.

Mr. HALE. I will waive the motion if we can take a vote at once upon the pending amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire, before the vote is taken, to say that I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. I do not know that it would be an unfair discrimination in favor of the members of the Senate and House to award them the privilege of sending communications in reference to public business under their franks free of any charge to themselves; but, as the Senator from Michigan has well said, when we had that privilege before, very great scandals did originate and great complaints were heard throughout the country about the abuse of the privilege with which the two Houses were clothed. It was charged that party campaign documents were sent out under the frank of members of Congress. Whether that was true or not I do not know, but such avowels were made in the papers. While it was not done perhaps with the consent of the member whose frank was used, his frank was used, as was stated in the papers frequently, to send out partisan documents, campaign documents, not in reference to public business but to advance the interests of party. That abuse gave rise to a discussion upon the subject in the papers, which finally induced Congress to repeal the privilege.

For one, I do not want to see the privilege restored. We have an allowance of $125 made for postage, stationery, &c. Doubtless that is not sufficient to cover the expenditures for stationery and postage by many members of the Senate, but I apprehend that a great many members of the Senate are fully indemnified by that allowance for all the postage and stationery which they require.

Let us go on as we have been going. For myself I do not want the privilege of sending out any paper under my frank. I have now lying on my desk two communications from the Pension Office in response to inquiries made through me as to the status of claims that were filed in that office. I had received from the parties, one in my town and the other in a neighboring town, inquiries in reference to their cases. I have the reply of the Commissioner of Pensions in reference to the status of those claims, but I especially requested him not to send me an official envelope, because I should want to add something in addition to his own communication, and therefore I did not intend to use the envelope which he would furnish me for the purpose of sending off that correspondence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would have been contrary to law if you had. He had no business to furnish the envelopes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. When I write to a constituent of mine informing him that I had called on the Department and made the inquiry desired, and the answer is herewith inclosed, I add something to what the Commissioner of Pensions says, and therefore I was not going to subject myself to the criticism of having used the envelope for the purpose of making any other communication than that which the Department itself made.

I think we had better let the system go on just as it is now. It may be a tax to some extent upon certain members from large States and from States where there is a large amount of departmental business, as in the new States, but for the members from the smaller States, such as the State of the Senator from Vermont and my own, I apprehend the $125 we get would cover all our expenses for stationery and for postage-stamps. I shall therefore vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So do I. Let us have them.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.] Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I refrain from voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. VEST] is detained at home by severe indisposition.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES,] but as I understand he would vote "yea" on this question I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 15; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before putting the question the Chair will lay before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5221) to amend section 3066 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

DAKOTA LAND DISTRICTS.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of executive business I desire to call up a bill from the House of Representatives, which is on the table, and I ask that it be put on its passage. It is recommended by the Department, and the Senate Committee on Public Lands had a similar bill before it, which it considered, and it was reported favorably by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. McDILL.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 4698) to create two additional land districts, and to change the boundaries of the Watertown land district, in the Territory of Dakota, received yesterday from the House of Representatives. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the bill come from a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a House bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does it come from a committee?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is a bill received yesterday from the House. A similar bill was considered by the Senate committee, having been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and was reported favorably and is on the Calendar. I merely ask to have the House bill passed instead of the Senate bill.

Mr. McDILL. This bill is precisely in terms the bill as recommended by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move the indefinite postponement of Senate bill No. 926, a similar bill, now on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and fifty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 16, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLANE. The question of privilege I make to the Chair is that the Chair in its language on yesterday, addressed to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY,] invaded the privileges of the House, and the Chair permitted itself to entertain a motion to adjourn before it had responded to this question of privilege, raised by me yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman is in error. At the time the House adjourned last night, on the motion of the gentleman from Delaware, the whole matter had been suspended. No gentleman was taking the floor, and the Chair had then made such answer as it desired to make. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Maryland cannot rise twice to the same question of privilege, and therefore, unless there is some new question of privilege——

Mr. McLANE. I am perfectly aware of that. But I trust the Chair will have patience to allow me to state my case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. McLANE. The Chair in responding to my question of privilege—I will not say evaded the question; I will simply call his attention to the fact that he avoided me; that he made a reply to my question of privilege and then, without submitting the question to the House, recognized the gentleman from Ohio. I was attentive to what occurred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no recollection of recognizing the gentleman from Ohio at the time referred to.

Mr. McLANE. If the Chair will only hear my statement it is all I ask.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair would like to know of the gentleman from Maryland whether he means to say that the Chair, after answering the gentleman's question, recognized the gentleman from Ohio. What gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. McLANE. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the Chair did not conclude his answer to me. I mean to say that the Chair having made its reply to the question of privilege raised by me recognized the gentleman from Ohio, when it was under an obligation to submit that question to the House, having made its own statement. And now my point is that the Chair, if it did not originally invade the privilege of the House, invaded it then; that the Chair is under an absolute obligation to submit that question to the House.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland that it does not understand that he rises to any new question of privilege; and the Chair had made such answer as he thought fitting to the question of privilege raised on yesterday.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Maryland does rise to a new question of privilege, and has stated the new question of privilege. When I raised the question of privilege yesterday as to the language the Chair addressed to the gentleman from Mississippi, I desired to use no disrespectful expression, and refrain from saying that the Chair evaded the point at issue and again violated the privileges of the House. But the point I make now and the question of privilege I raise now is that the Chair failed in its obligation to submit that question to the House; and that in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair again invaded the privileges of the House.

Mr. HASKELL. Now I rise to a question of order.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will——

Mr. McLANE. I am entitled to be heard by the Chair; and I have that respect for the Chair and for my brother members which assures me they will allow me to state my case. It is in the interest of every member, and of the Chair itself, entirely in the interest of the Chair. The Chair made an explanation and reply to the question of privilege, and then without concluding, without doing what the law of the House obliges him to do, he recognized the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will give attention. The Chair does not now know what point, and the gentleman fails to state to the Chair what new point, the gentleman desires to make.

Mr. McLANE. Not a new point. But the question of privilege now made is that on yesterday when the Chair recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and entertained a parliamentary question from him and gave a reply to that parliamentary question——

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER rapped with his gavel.

Mr. McLANE. The Chair failed at that moment to do what it was its duty to do under the rules and law of the House——

Mr. HASKELL rose.

The SPEAKER renewed his rapping with the gavel.

Mr. McLANE. Failed to submit the question of privilege to the House. The Chair then took away from me my right to have a vote of this House; and that is a violation of privilege, and in that it is my privilege that has been invaded.

The SPEAKER, (rapping with his gavel.) The gentleman must be in order himself as we proceed.

Mr. McLANE. If the Chair thinks I am out of order I will take my seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not ask the gentleman to take his seat.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order with respect to this proceeding.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair desires to state that it understands the gentleman from Maryland to make the point that it was the duty of the Chair to submit the question of privilege, or the supposed question of privilege, to the House.

Mr. McLANE. That is the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair states that under the rules it was wholly a matter of discretion, and the Chair so holds now.

Mr. McLANE. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. HASKELL. Upon the point of order that I raised concerning this proceeding——

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. HASKELL. Before the proceeding went so far as that, I called the attention of the Chair to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. HASKELL. But I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MONEY. I call the gentleman from Kansas to order.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to withdraw the appeal I have taken from the decision of the Chair, that the House may entertain and consider a resolution concerning the original question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland withdraws his appeal.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. HASKELL. I want to state my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] is recognized.

Mr. KENNA. For what purpose?

The SPEAKER. On a point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order, without a particle of harshness of feeling——

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a question of the highest privilege under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia will be listened to.

Mr. HASKELL. On my point of order I desire to say that it is a well-settled parliamentary principle that upon questions just such as the one which has been raised here, unless the necessary proceedings touching words spoken in debate, or such questions of privilege—unless the necessary proceedings are at once instituted, the words taken down, and the House halted in its deliberations to consider them, it is a well-settled parliamentary practice and principle, coming down from the oldest law——

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. That the adjournment of the House is a notice to the House and to the country that the whole proceeding is quashed absolutely.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HASKELL. And there is nothing before the House.

Mr. WHITE. I raise the point of order that there is nothing before the House.

Mr. HASKELL. I am stating my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The appeal from the decision of the Chair has been withdrawn.

Mr. WHITE. The appeal having been withdrawn, there is nothing before the House, and therefore I call the gentleman from Kansas to order.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia states that he rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. KENNA. I do, and I desire that the House shall be in order, that I may be able so to state it that it may be heard and considered. I rise for the purpose of offering a privileged resolution. In order to submit to the House the matter to which it relates, I ask that the Clerk will read——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit his resolution and not proceed to debate.

Mr. KENNA. I will submit the resolution at as early a moment as it may suit the desire of the Chair to hear it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be submitted.

Mr. KENNA. I desire, in that connection, at the proper time, to state the facts to which it relates.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rights and duties of the Speaker of this House are defined by the rules of the House and by general parliamentary law not in conflict therewith, and that by virtue of said rules and under said law the Speaker enjoys no privilege to reprimand or censure a member except by the action of the House and in pursuance of its direction.

Resolved further, That any attempted exercise of such power is a breach of the privileges of the House, is hereby expressly condemned, and will be promptly resisted and otherwise dealt with as the rights, dignity, and duties of the House may require.

Mr. KENNA. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to have read from page 1931 of the RECORD what I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONEY. Then I desire to state that not one single member representing the submerged districts provided for in this joint resolution has been heard before the House. The gentleman from New York has refused to hear from the State of Mississippi by gentlemen who represent the districts inundated, and for whom this appropriation is proposed to be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state if gentlemen think they can impose on the House and the Chair by undertaking to make speeches in violation of the rules, the Chair will take pains to reprimand them at least.

Mr. KENNA. I ask now that the marked passage on page 1942 of the RECORD be read.

Mr. REED. I do not desire that the opportunity to make any point of order upon this resolution should pass by. I understand that the matter is still open, and that this reading is not in the nature of debate.

Mr. KENNA. The gentleman may reserve points of order. There is no disposition here to take any advantage.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to ask the Chair whether it intends to be understood as holding, either by its statement now or by its action to-day, that it is either the right or the duty of the Speaker of this House to reprimand a member without the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that it is made its imperative duty to preserve order, and whatever steps are necessary, within the power of the Chair, to accomplish that, this Chair will assert. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Chair will not evade my inquiry.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will not resume their seats when they are out of order and called to order, the Chair may go further, if necessary, than merely to reprimand if they still insist upon violating the rules of the House.

Mr. KENNA. I trust that to a fair parliamentary inquiry the Speaker will honor me with a direct answer. I ask the Chair now to state to me, as candidly as I propound the inquiry, whether the Chair desires to be understood as holding it to be his right or duty to reprimand a member on this floor without action of the House?

The SPEAKER. When any gentleman is in the act of openly violating the rules of the House, which the Chair is charged with enforcing, the Chair will state that it regards it as not only a duty but a right to reprimand him and to insist upon his being in order; not that he has the right to call a member up and punish him, but that he has a right to insist upon his keeping order.

Mr. KENNA. I now ask the Clerk to read the marked passage on page 1944 of the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is this. I desire to see if I am correct in my understanding as to the statement made by the Chair a few moments ago. I do not understand the Chair to hold that it has a right, in a technical sense, to reprimand a member without the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. Except when gentlemen insist upon violating and continue to violate the rules of the House. It is certainly true that the Chair under the rules has the right to reprimand a gentleman when he is persisting in a violation of the rules of the House. That is all the Chair has done.

Mr. KENNA. And now I desire to make a brief statement.

Mr. HASKELL. And I assert against this proceeding the point of order which I before stated to this House.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt my statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman from West Virginia will be allowed to make his statement.

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. I desire, in the first place, to state to the Chair and to this House that the resolution offered by me is prompted in no sense by a feeling of any character other than a disposition to assert and maintain the prerogatives of this House and of its membership. I desire to state, further, that in my judgment, and, as I believe, in the judgment of this House, the position assumed on yesterday and asserted by the Speaker is a wholly untenable one; and this side of the House, at least, is desirous in some manner to go on the record in repudiation of it. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state at this point that it is of opinion that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] has simply misunderstood all that took place on yesterday in relation to this matter.

Mr. KENNA. I trust the entire House, Mr. Speaker, is in precisely the same attitude.

The SPEAKER. After all that has been said, there should be no misunderstanding the position taken by the Chair. It never has proposed to assume the powers of the House in punishing a member for any past disorderly conduct, it has only asserted its right as a presiding officer to preserve order and to do all that may be necessary within parliamentary usage to secure that end. The duty of the Chair in this respect is one settled not only by long parliamentary usage, but by the imperative terms of the rules of this House. The Chair used the word "reprimand" in its ordinary and proper sense, not in its technical sense.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The meaning of the term "reprimand" is well defined and well understood. To "reprimand" is to check and to repress a member when out of order. Beyond this a presiding officer should not go in administering a reprimand; less than this the Chair cannot do and discharge its duty to the House. The Chair never assumed to reprimand a member for what he had done; that is for the House. The Chair should check, repress, or reprimand a member while persisting in being out of order. The Chair desires to repeat that in all that took place on yesterday, in all that was said, it never undertook to reprimand a member for any past act; but if to call a member to order and to remind him that he is not in order is to reprimand him, then the Chair simply did what the rules require him to do.

The highest parliamentary reprimand known to the Parliament of England is to mention a member's name, which puts him then in parliamentary disgrace. Our manual of practice allows that to be done here. That was not done on yesterday; nor was any person reprimanded beyond the mere calling him to order and insisting upon the preservation of order. The Chair has the right in extreme cases to order the Sergeant-at-Arms to forcibly preserve order, even to the extent of arresting a member if he persists in violating order, and may it not first use less violent means?

The Chair desires to add that the RECORD of this morning is unfair to the Chair, in that it does not show that the member from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] when called to order by the Chair, and when the House was rapped to order, still persisted and continued to make a speech out of order and in violation of the rules. There is nothing, the Chair will state, in the proposed resolution that it would not subscribe to and vote for if upon the floor, if anybody assumed the powers and duties of the House in the matter of administering a reprimand.

Mr. KENNA. Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of that statement——

Mr. WHITE. I rise to the point of order that this whole matter is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that if I could so have understood the Speaker on yesterday, and if this House had so understood his declarations, this resolution would not have been presented. In view of the present statement of the Chair, which I regard as sufficient, I withdraw it. [Applause, and cries of "That is right."]

So, no objection being made, the resolution was, by unanimous consent, withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports in the morning hour.

Mr. KELLEY. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to suspend the call for the regular order, in order that I may submit a bill which it is important to have acted upon immediately.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must recognize the demand for the regular order. The regular order, as the Chair has stated, is the morning hour for the call of committees. If the demand for the regular order is withdrawn, however, the Chair will recognize some gentleman for unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE. Then I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall not object to the introduction of bills for reference, but shall object to the consideration of bills at this time.

PENSIONS, WAR OF 1812.

Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5214) restoring to the pension-roll the names of all persons now surviving heretofore pensioned on account of service in the war with Mexico, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH HERTFORD.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5215) for the relief of Joseph Hertford; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PINKNEY ROLLINS.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5216) for the relief of Pinkney Rollins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOSIAH WELSH.

Mr. VANCE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5217) for the relief of Josiah Welsh; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZA A. BARROW.

Mr. DE MOTTE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5218) granting a pension to Eliza A. Barrow; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD CONSOLIDATION.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2534, a bill (H. R. No. 5219) to authorize the consolidation of railroad companies in the Territories of the United States; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

Mr. SPRINGER. That bill is not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The present rules of the House prevent that.

MARY S. AND SARAH BATES.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5520) to place on the pension-roll the names of Mary S. Bates and Sarah Bates; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPRISONMENT AND DETENTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I desire at this time to submit several resolutions relating to the imprisonment of American citizens in Great Britain, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolutions are as follows:

JEFFERSON HALL, BROOKLYN, February 16, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have been instructed by the executive committee of the Land League of Brooklyn to inform you of their cordial and hearty approval of your action in regard to the incarceration of American citizens in British dungeons. It is about time some effort was made to protect the person and property of citizens of the United States while traveling abroad. May God speed you in your noble and heroic struggle. Please convey to the Representatives who have so ably sustained you our sincere and heartfelt thanks, and assure them that they, as you, shall ever retain a place in the hearts of all true Irishmen.

Respectfully,

JAMES DIXON, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON.

ROOMS CENTRAL DELEGATES,
Boston, March 9, 1882.

HONORED SIR: Delegates representing the various land league branches of Boston and vicinity, in convention assembled, unanimously passed the following resolutions on account of your noble and earnest endeavors in behalf of unjustly treated citizens:

Resolved, That our thanks are eminently due and are cordially tendered to Hon. W. E. ROBINSON for his noble and manly exertions to obtain the release of American citizens now incarcerated in English prisons, and for the timely and salutary admonition given to American statesmen regarding their apathy and neglect of most important duties.

Resolved, That in the persons of Hons. W. E. ROBINSON and S. S. COX the citizens of the United States, and particularly those by adoption, must ever cherish the highest appreciation of respect and gratitude to these champions of civil liberty for their efforts to raise the status of American citizenship so that it must be respected at home and protected abroad.

Respectfully, yours,

THOMAS F. DOHERTY, East Boston,
JAMES W. COTLET, Secretary, Boston,
ENEAS SMITH, Brookline,
ROBERT E. DONNELLY, Boston,
M. CLASBY, Cambridge,
N. E. O'SULLIVAN, Boston Highlands,
Mrs. JOHN CLAGERTY, Boston,
Mrs. T. PEYTON, Boston,
Committee on Resolutions.

At a meeting of the Ogdensburgh branch of the Land League, held in Saint Patrick's Hall, Wednesday evening last, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the indifference of our Government and the apathy of its ministers to England in allowing American citizens to be thrown into prison by the British Government and to langnish therein indefinitely without even an inquiry being made as to why they had been arrested and incarcerated, or upon what grounds those American citizens had been deprived of their liberty, has long been felt by a large number of Americans to be a disgrace which no self-respecting nation should submit to, and an act which Washington, Jefferson, Monroe, or Jackson would not have tolerated in their time, and an indignity against which every citizen with Irish blood in his veins cannot too strongly protest; and

Whereas the House of Representatives have at present under consideration a resolution touching the matter above referred to: Therefore,

Resolved, That we, the Ogdensburgh branch of the Irish National Land League, in session assembled this 8th day of February, 1882, enter our protest against the disgraceful and unjustifiable neglect of the United States Government in the premises, and its dilatory and ungrateful action in reference to the protection of American citizens in foreign countries, especially in England.

Resolved, That we tender to Hon. W. E. ROBINSON and Hon. S. S. COX our sincere thanks for the efforts recently made in Congress to bring the matter of protection to American citizens now imprisoned by England to the attention of our Government, and that we respectfully submit this question to our member of Congress, Hon. A. X. PARKER, reminding him how deep a sympathy it evokes from a large number of his constituents who feel assured it will not fail to enlist his influence and co-operation.

Resolved, That these preambles and resolutions be published and copies thereof be transmitted to Congressmen ROBINSON, COX, and PARKER.

FRANCIS KEARNS,
W. H. MURPHY,
JAMES E. KELLY,
Committee.

PHILADELPHIA, February 20, 1882.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Commodore Stewart branch of the Irish National League and Irish League the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we tender our thanks to our Representatives in Congress, Hon. A. C. HARMER, Hon. S. J. RANDALL, of Philadelphia, Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON and Hon. S. S. COX, of New York, for interest taken by them in bill of inquiry relating to the imprisonment of American citizens in British prisons without trial, and shall hold them in esteem as the defenders of the liberties of our people abroad as well as at home.

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to forward a copy of the above resolution to each of the gentlemen named, also one to the Central Union.

Yours, &c.,

JOHN McCAFFREY, Secretary,
(317 Diamond Street, Philadelphia.)

Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON, Washington, D. C.

BRADFORD, February 23, 1882.

At a meeting of the Bradford branch of the Irish National Land League, held Monday, February 20, the following resolutions were adopted and ordered mailed for your honorable consideration, to wit:

Resolved, That the Irish National Land League of Bradford, Pennsylvania, tender their heartfelt thanks to and do most fully indorse Hon. W. E. ROBINSON and Hon. S. S. COX, of New York, in the well-merited rebuke which they administered to those responsible for this disgraceful negligence for not affording that protection which every nation owes to those who have sworn allegiance to her flag.

Resolved, That the Irish National League of Bradford respectfully submit this question to the consideration of our honorable member of Congress, reminding him how deep a sympathy and interest it invokes from a large number of his constituents, and who feel assured that it will not fail to enlist his influence and co-operation.

Resolved, That in submitting these resolutions we feel that this is an important question of the citizens of this Republic who were born in Ireland, or who have descended from the Irish race, and who are to-day part and parcel of this great Republic; also that the action taken by Hon. W. E. ROBINSON and Hon. S. S. COX in the House of Representatives should receive the indorsement of all the members of the House.

T. McMANUS, President.
J. F. FAUX, Secretary.

CUSTOM-HOUSE SEARCH-WARRANTS.

Mr. KELLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5221) to amend section 3066 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. KELLEY. This is a report from the Committee on Ways and Means, and I ask for the immediate passage of the bill, which has been sent from the Treasury, for the purpose of enabling the customs officers to issue search-warrants in the State of New York for smuggled goods. The law now provides that the oath of information must be made before a justice of the peace, an officer unknown to the laws of New York. The bill provides that such oaths may be made before commissioners of United States courts.

Mr. SPRINGER. There should be no objection to that.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I wish to ask before whom these affidavits have been heretofore made?

Mr. KELLEY. Originally before a justice of the peace, and the law so required. But it is reported from New York that the office of justice of the peace is unknown to the law, and that therefore no search-warrant can be issued. The customs officers there and the Treasury Department ask simply to provide a means by which search-warrants may issue. They are prohibited under the present statute.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Certainly warrants have been issued in New York in times past?

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Upon what authority?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know. I only know that it has been brought to the attention of the Treasury Department that they cannot now be issued. Nobody will take the responsibility of issuing one, because there is no officer of the character designated in the statute. There is a report accompanying the bill which I would be glad to have read.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I do not like to interpose an objection; but there has been great complaint in the city of New York about unauthorized search-warrants. I do not know the effect of the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like to have the report of the Judiciary Committee upon that question.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will hear the bill read and the report, which is short, I think he will be satisfied.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Very well; I reserve the point.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HUTCHINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question: Does the bill extend the right of search? or does it simply allow affidavits to be taken before other officers than those contemplated by the section to be amended?

Mr. KELLEY. The bill does not extend the right of search in any degree. By a change of the law of New York the office of justice of the peace has disappeared. The bill simply provides for the execution of the provisions of the section before another competent officer.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to be permitted to say a single word as I have the statute before me. I followed the language as nearly as I could while the Clerk was reading, and I find that the bill, in lieu of the words in the existing statute, "justice of the peace," inserts the proper legal officer to do what is there provided for, there being in New York no justice of the peace. I call the attention of my friend from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] to the language of the statute.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I rose to object to the present consideration of the bill because I consider it as too serious a matter to push through in this way. It ought to be open to discussion. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not correct in saying we have no justice of the peace in New York. Certain officers there are recognized as justices of the peace.

Mr. KELLEY. They are not so recognized as to justify them in issuing a warrant under this law.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I must insist on my objection.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York farthest from the Chair [Mr. HUTCHINS] reserved the right to object.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I withdraw the objection. I find the bill simply provides for officers before whom to take an oath; but while I withdraw the objection I protest against the section as it stands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] reserved the right to object, and the Chair thinks that reservation was not only for his own benefit, but for the benefit of others who might be inclined to object. Therefore the Chair holds the objection by the gentleman from New York in front of the Chair [Mr. ROBINSON] to have been made in time.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the regular order.
Mr. KELLEY. I ask that the bill may go to the Calendar.
The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.
Some time subsequently,
Mr. KELLEY said: The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] withdraws his objection. I ask that the call for the regular order be suspended to allow the bill to be put upon its passage, as this is an important matter.
Mr. CONVERSE. I renew the objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE.]
Mr. PAGE. I am willing to yield for a short time, with the understanding that we are not to have a morning hour.
Mr. HUMPHREY. I call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

DOCUMENTS TOUCHING IMPORT DUTIES.

Mr. KELLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) to provide for printing certain documents relating to customs revenues for the use of Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANDERSON D. MERCHANT.

Mr. MANNING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3552) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Anderson D. Merchant; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL H. LOCKETT.

Mr. MANNING also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2816) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Samuel H. Lockett, of Alabama; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1993) to amend sections 2582, 2583, 2607, and 2684 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the collection districts of California; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report a resolution——
The SPEAKER. That is not in order under this call.
Mr. PAGE. It is a resolution of inquiry, which is privileged.
The SPEAKER. It is privileged at any time outside of this call. The Chair has on former occasions allowed a report of this kind to be considered; but if debate should spring up on such a report it might occupy the entire hour.
Mr. PAGE. It will not take up any time.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman perhaps had better withdraw it until after the hour. It is always in order.
Mr. PAGE. Very well, I will do so.

FORT BENTON RESERVATION.

Mr. MAGINNIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1916, a bill (H. R. No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton Military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, placed on the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the first amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) making a further appropriation to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; and had disagreed to the second amendment of the House to said joint resolution.

PETER SCOUDEN.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 242) for the relief of Peter Scouden; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EDWARD SHIELDS AND OTHERS.

Mr. BAYNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2611) for the relief of Edward Shields and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARGES OF DESERTION.

Mr. BAYNE also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 891) to remove the charge of desertion and for the relief of certain named soldiers of the Twenty-first Missouri Infantry Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. V. DAVIS.

Mr. BAYNE also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4769) for the relief of J. V. Davis, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.
The motion was agreed to.

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 493) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of war; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARCELLUS MARTIN.

Mr. UPSON also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5223) for the relief of Marcellus Martin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON, ETC.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the following, which were severally placed on the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:
A bill (H. R. No. 3738) to donate bronze cannon to the township of Milan, Ohio.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to state to the gentleman from California that my colleague [Mr. BLACK] is quite sick. He would have introduced on Monday the bill which I hold in my hand but for his illness. I ask to be permitted to introduce it for reference.

The petition and accompanying resolutions are as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled at Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Massachusetts, considering polygamy in our Territories as dangerous to our peace, a foul blot on our national purity and a crime against the law of God, humbly petition your honorable bodies to enact and enforce such laws in Utah and elsewhere as will destroy it from our Christian civilization.

At a mass meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, held Monday, March 13, presided over by Bishop R. O. Foster, D. D., LL. D., of the Metodist Episcopal Church, addressed by Rev. A. Hovey, D. D., president of the Newton Theological Seminary; Hon. Robert V. Bishop, president of the Senate; Rev. E. H. Capen, D. D., president of Tuft's College; and Rt. Rev. Bishop B. H. Mr. SPRINGER. There are other very important bills on the Calendar.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER. The regular order which is now insisted on is the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 71) to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the people of the Pacific slope, who have so long and so patiently borne the burden of Chinese immigration, and I congratulate also the whole United States, who were destined to be its victims, upon the hope of receiving substantial if not entire relief by the passage of this bill. And especially do I congratulate them and the friends of this measure upon the fact that thus far in this debate no one has been found to deny absolutely either the necessity, the propriety, or the justice of this legislation. Every gentleman who has spoken in opposition to this bill has declared—and I do not think I am mistaken in this statement—that if the time of its operation was restricted to five or ten instead of twenty years, as here provided, he would vote for it. If the commercial interests of the country, if the traditions of our fathers and the broad principles of equality and sentimental philanthropy can be laid aside and ignored for five or for ten years, it becomes simply a question of policy or expediency, and not of right, whether they cannot be suspended for twice ten years. As the gentlemen who oppose this bill announce their willingness to vote for a five or ten year suspension, the principle of the present bill, its rightfulness, propriety, and necessity are admitted. At the very threshold of this discussion, therefore, there is cause for congratulation.

The whole subject of Chinese immigration has been made familiar to the country. From every stand-point and in every forum—economically, scientifically, politically, and religiously; in the pulpit, on the hustings, in the courts, and before the nominating conventions of all parties—this question has been discussed as one inwoven with the future destiny and welfare of our people and involving the safety and harmony of our social and political institutions.

As a member of the committee reporting the House bill, and as chairman of the sub-committee who reported a similar bill in the last two Congresses, I have given the facts and principles upon which it rests the most careful consideration. Still, in view of the general discussion which the subject has received, I can only hope to be a gleaner where others have reaped—to add but a mite to the rich contributions of thought and information already given to the subject.

Before discussing the merits of the bill now before us, let us recall for a moment the facts connected with the

FIRST APPEARANCE OF CHINESE IN AMERICA AND THE LEGISLATION HERETOFORE ATTEMPTED.

The news of the discovery of gold in fabulous quantities in California attracted an immigration from all parts of the world. Among the earliest arrivals were the Chinese. It is a well-known fact, and one which should be borne in mind in the present discussion, that there was no prejudice or hostility to them at this time. On the contrary, they were welcomed as a unique addition to the society and a valuable ally in the development of the material resources of their new home. As late as March 11, 1862, the Legislature of California, through a joint select committee, made an elaborate report, from which I shall quote hereafter, congratulating the State upon the presence of the Chinese, urging the adoption of measures to secure as permanent citizens those already here and offering inducements to others to come. When this report was made the Chinese population in the State was estimated at fifty thousand. Within less than five years after this report the favorable judgment expressed by it was entirely reversed, and the Chinese, by reason of their sordid, selfish, immoral, and non-amalgamating habits, came to be regarded as a standing menace to the social, industrial, and political institutions of the State.

MUNICIPAL AND STATE EFFORTS AT RELIEF.

First, in the city of San Francisco, where, because of its immense Chinese population, the evil results of their presence were most conspicuous, and subsequently throughout the whole State, the hostility to the Chinese became so great as to threaten constantly a breach of the peace. The public press was almost unanimous in its condemnation. Enthusiastic public meetings were held, presided over by representative men of the State. Anti-Chinese societies were formed and a war of races seemed imminent. The municipal and State authorities, responding to this overwhelming sentiment, endeavored to remedy the evil by ordinances and legislative enactments. Among these may be recalled the "queue ordinance," the "capitation tax," the "basket ordinance," the "landing tax," and the "cubic-air law," all of which were aimed at the Chinese, and all of which were finally adjudged to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. The hope of reaching and remedying the evil by State or municipal legislation was finally and utterly overthrown by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Chy Lung, plaintiff in error, vs. Commissioners of Immigration of California et al., which went to the length of deciding that the State of California had no power to prohibit the landing of passengers of any kind whatever, not even when known to be immoral, criminal, or vagrants.

APPEALS TO CONGRESS FOR RELIEF.

Every other means of relief proving ineffectual, the people of the Pacific coast determined to appeal to Congress. Accordingly, as early as the 22d of December, 1869, over twelve years ago, at the second session of the Forty-first Congress, an effort was made, but without success, to secure restrictive legislation. In the Forty-second and also in the Forty-third Congress numerous memorials, resolutions of public meetings, and petitions, one of which numbered over 16,000 signatures, was presented to the same effect and with the same result. At the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress these renewed appeals for relief met for the first time with a favorable response. A joint resolution was introduced and passed calling upon the President of the United States to "open negotiations with the Chinese Government for the purpose of modifying the provisions between the two countries, and restricting the same to commercial purposes."

At the second session of the same Congress another joint resolution was passed requesting the President to present to the Chinese Government an additional article to the treaty of July 28, 1868, reserving mutually to the two governments the right to regulate, restrict, or prevent immigration to their respective countries. These authoritative requests on the part of Congress failed to secure the desired relief. In the meanwhile the question had assumed dangerous proportions. The conviction that Chinese immigration was a great evil was so deep-seated and unanimous that mob violence was openly threatened, and in many instances the arm of the law seemed powerless to protect. Recognizing the exigency, the Legislature of California appointed a special committee who presented an "Address to the people of the United States," and a memorial to Congress, based upon the testimony of witnesses acquainted with the subject, which ably and graphically sets forth the objections to the Chinese.

ACTION AND REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

After presenting the facts and the failure of legislative efforts at relief, the committee say:

In view of these facts thousands of our people are beginning to feel a settled exasperation, a profound sense of dissatisfaction with the situation. Hitherto this feeling has been restrained, and with few exceptions the Chinese have had the full protection of our laws. The people of this State have been more than patient; the condition of affairs as they exist in San Francisco would not be tolerated without a resort to violence in any eastern city. It is the part of wisdom to anticipate the day when patience may cease, and by wise legislation to avert its evils. Impending difficulties of this character should not, in this advanced age, be left to the chance arbitrament of force. These are questions which ought to be solved by the statesman and philanthropist, and not by the soldier.

This address and memorial was adopted and published on the 13th day of August 1877. In July of the preceding year, at the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, a joint special committee was appointed, which collected voluminous testimony upon the same subject, and by a majority report urged upon the executive department the necessity for an immediate change of the Burlingame treaty to the end that such immigration might be restricted or prevented. That committee visited the Pacific coast and examined one hundred and thirty witnesses. The testimony so taken covers over 1,200 pages of printed matter, and embraces the views of all classes of the community and every variety of interest. The report of the committee closes in these words:

From all the facts that they have gathered bearing upon the matter, considering fairly the testimony for and against the Chinese, the committee believe that the influx of Chinese is a standing menace to republican institutions upon the Pacific and the existence there of Christian civilization. * * * This problem is too important to be treated with indifference. It must be solved, unless our Pacific possessions are to be ultimately given over to a race alien in all its tendencies, which will make of them practically provinces of China rather than States of the Union.

The committee demand relief from this "terrible scourge" by prompt restrictive legislation on the part of Congress, whether approved by the Chinese Government or not.

In the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress it became my duty, under instructions from the Committee on Education and Labor, to present to the House a resolution which again called attention to the obnoxious features of the Burlingame treaty and requested prompt action on the part of the executive department in securing its change or abrogation. As no action was taken upon this resolution our sub-committee was authorized during the third session of the same Congress to present a bill upon the subject. That bill, popularly known as the "Fifteen Chinese passenger bill," was passed by an overwhelming majority, but was arrested by the interposition of the President's veto. In the Forty-sixth Congress we presented several resolutions of inquiry and appeal to the Executive. Finally ministers plenipotentiary were appointed, by whom—on the 17th of November, 1880—the treaty was concluded under whose provisions we now propose to legislate.

I have thus, Mr. Speaker, given the history of former efforts at relief, from which it will be seen that this bill is not the offspring of sudden impulse and passion, but that it is the result of long, faithful, and laborious exertions, and that if passed it will be a late, if not reluctant, response to appeals that have been heard and unheeded upon this floor for nearly twelve years.

THE QUESTION TO BE DECIDED UPON THE LAW AND THE EVIDENCE.

For myself, I am free to admit that when it first became my duty four years ago to investigate this subject I had only a vague and general idea of its nature and importance. Like the gentleman from Massachusetts who last discussed this bill, I thought that the cry of the Californians, "the Chinese must go," was an unjust, causeless, "sand-lot" cry; that it was the voice of ignorance, brutality, and fanaticism; and that the vast majority of the sober-minded and intelligent people of the Pacific slope regarded the Chinese as a frugal, peaceable, and industrious race, worthy of respect and entitled to protection.

Such were the views, or "prejudices," if you please, which I brought to the consideration of this question. If, therefore, I have reversed those opinions; if I have come to believe, as I do now believe, that the Chinese are a discordant and disturbing element in society; that they are an enemy to our progressive civilization, an alien, indigestible, and destroying substance in our body-politic; that the hostility which has manifested itself is the outgrowth, not of passion and prejudice, but rests upon calm, deliberate intelligence and judgment—if, in other words, I believe that the bill now pending is fully justified by the facts, that it is sanctioned by law, prompted by the instinct of self-preservation, and demanded by the highest patriotism, it is because the overwhelming weight of the evidence has compelled such a conclusion. And I believe, sir, that if the evidence which has been produced before our committee were submitted to a hundred men, ninety-nine of that number would reach the same conclusion. Of this fact we have a most notable example in the late President. When the Chinese bill was before the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, it is well known that Mr. Garfield was not in sympathy with its object, and that he voted to lay the bill and amendments on the table and to sustain the veto. The passage of the bill in the House, however, directed the attention of the country and his attention to the facts and principles upon which it was based. As a consequence we find him only two years afterward, in his letter accepting the Republican nomination—which I hold in my hand—with that high moral courage which was always outspoken in its convictions, declaring the "recent movement of the Chinese to our Pacific coast to be too much like an importation to be welcomed without restriction; too much like an invasion to be looked upon without solicitude." And rising still higher in his recognition of the gravity of the subject and the necessity for relief, he declares that "should diplomatic negotiations fail, it will be the duty of Congress to mitigate the evils already felt, and prevent their increase by such restrictions as, without violence or injustice, will place upon a sure foundation the peace of our communities and the freedom and dignity of labor." When the facts are fully understood the judgment of Mr. Garfield will be the judgment of this House and of the country.

IS THIS BILL AUTHORIZED BY THE TREATY?

I would therefore submit this bill for a decision here as I would submit a case to the decision of a jury. I would have it tried upon the law and the evidence. What, then, is the law? On the 17th of November, 1880, a treaty was concluded between China and the United States. The first article of that treaty expressly declares the right of the United States "to regulate, limit, or suspend the coming or residence of Chinese laborers." But, says the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] this bill practically amounts to a prohibition and the treaty provides that the limitation "shall be reasonable." Is there any doubt as to the meaning of "suspend?" Does it not mean a holding up, an entire stoppage of immigration for a fixed time? Does not the gentleman in the progress of his argument admit this by declaring that he would vote for a bill for a "short suspension upon this immigration?" But the present period he claims to be unreasonable, and hence against the treaty. Who, Mr. Speaker, is to decide this question? Who has said on the part of the Chinese Government that twenty years is not a reasonable suspension? Shall we, the Representatives of the American people, undertake to speak for the Chinese Government? Shall we anticipate their views upon this subject? What is twenty years to a nation which proudly boasts of its centuries of existence? And, sir, if the Government of China thinks this suspension unreasonable is there not ample provision in the treaty itself? The fourth article expressly provides that "if the measures as enacted are found to work hardships upon the subjects of China, the Chinese Minister at Washington may bring the matter to the notice of the United States, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit may result." I submit this article of the treaty as a full and complete answer to the objections urged against this bill either as to the reasonableness of the time or the methods of registration and identification. It will be time enough to change or modify our bill when China makes complaint.

For myself, I have no doubt as to our legal right to legislate upon this subject without a treaty or even against a treaty. But here we have a plain treaty—the supreme law of the land explicitly authorizing such legislation. Is there, can there be, a doubt, therefore, that we have a law for the passage of this bill?

HAS THE UNITED STATES EXPRESSED ITS "OPINION" AS REQUIRED IN THE TREATY?

But it may be said the right to legislate is, under the treaty, a conditional right. It is only, to quote the words of the treaty, "whenever, in the opinion of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States or their residence therein affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or any locality within the territory thereof," that such legislation as this is permissible. It will be seen that the treaty requires but an expression of an "opinion" on the part of the Government of the United States. That "opinion" may be right or wrong. It may be the result of misinformation, it may be prompted by hate and injustice, and yet when expressed it is conclusive upon the Chinese Government.

Under this strict and undoubtedly correct construction of the words of the treaty, certainly no one will deny that the "opinion of the Government of the United States" upon this question has not already been expressed, not once, nor casually, nor obscurely, but clearly, repeatedly, and most solemnly. Every department of the Government, judicial, legislative, and executive, has been outspoken in its "opinion." The decisions of the Supreme Court, which overthrew the anti-Chinese State laws and municipal ordinances, conceded the existence of the evils complained of and the necessity for national legislation. The legislative department has spoken to the same effect, both by the joint resolution and by the bill which was vetoed. One of these resolutions reported by myself, under instructions from the committee, passed this House in February, 1878. Its preamble is identical with the House bill, and expresses the "opinion," and gives the reason for it, that the Chinese are not suitable or desirable immigrants to this country. We have then the "opinion" of the Supreme Court, or at least of the member who rendered the principal decisions upon this subject; we have the "opinion" of several Congresses, and here in this treaty, through his ministers plenipotentiary, we have the "opinion" of the Chief Executive expressed in the words "whereas the Government of the United States, because of the constantly increasing immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States and the embarrassments consequent upon such immigration, now desires to negotiate a modification of the existing treaties," &c. The extent and character of these "embarrassments" were known to both the high contracting parties.

If, then, under the first article of the treaty, as a condition precedent to legislation, the United States must have expressed an "opinion" as to its necessity, who in the face of these repeated and emphatic declarations will contend that the condition has not been fulfilled? Here, having shown that the treaty authorizes this or some similar law, and that our Government has expressed its opinion that t is needed, the friends of the measure might rest its claims. The Government having committed itself advisedly and deliberately to this policy of restriction, having negotiated a treaty for the express purpose of enforcing such a policy, were it to refuse now to go further it would be an evidence of weakness and vacillation, if not of self-stultification, which every foreigner would regard with contempt and every American must recall with sorrow and humiliation.

HOW ARE THE ISSUES INVOLVED TO BE DETERMINED?

But, Mr. Speaker, while satisfied that this House is estopped by the facts from refusing this legislation, no friend of this bill need fear to submit its merits to any other test which may be demanded. I claim that it is not only legal and constitutional, but right and expedient; that the Chinese are not now and never will be adapted to our forms of society and government, and that it is to their interest and to our interest that the two races should not be intermingled.

How are these issues to be settled? Are we to evolve from our inner consciousness certain ideal, sublimated principles of government which shall control our decision? Shall we look down upon them from the mountain height of an exalted humanity, disregarding or ignoring the logic of practical facts? Can we determine them by their relation to the "fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man?" Shall we appeal to the teachings and traditions of our early history, to the principles of equality and liberty which are fundamental to our Government, and which have been so eloquently and so justly lauded in this debate?

Even by such standards this measure can be fully defended. But what more concerns us now and here is, not whether this legislation is in accord with the precepts of Plato and Socrates, not whether the Pilgrims of Plymouth Rock would have given it their gracious sanction, but whether we, the people of the United States of the present day, with the wars and tears and blood of two race conflicts upon our memories, are ready to invite another contest, fiercer, more fatal, more insidious and uncertain than either, ay, than both the others combined. It is whether the peace of society shall be destroyed, the dignity of labor degraded, and the condition of our working men and working women brought down to that of the beasts of the field.

WITNESSES WHOSE TESTIMONY SHOULD BE CONSIDERED.

Will any one deny these propositions? Upon whose testimony do they rest? Who are the witnesses now before the bar of this House, and who have stood here these many years to testify of these facts? Are they the "hoodlums," the "riffraff," and the "ruffians" of California and the Pacific States? Are they the lazy, the idle, and profligate, unwilling to work themselves and maliciously refusing that privilege to others? Are they individuals, a few among many thousands, who for private or interested motives wage this warfare upon the Chinese? Is it one city, or one community, or one State that demands, for cause stated, the passage of this law? Let the records of this body, let the facts of history answer these questions. We present you the testimony of individual citizens of the highest intelligence and character; we present you the statements of the representative men of every trade, avocation, and profession; we present you the resolutions of societies, both civic and religious; we present you the petitions and declarations of neighborhoods, counties, and municipalities. Certainly upon any question, however solemn and extraordinary, the testimony of such witnesses, clear, forcible, unimpeached, and unimpeachable, would be entirely conclusive.

FOUR STATES APPEALING FOR LEGISLATIVE RELIEF.

But, sir, we do not rest our case here. In addition to the proceedings of innumerable societies, religious bodies, labor conventions, and the petitions of over one hundred thousand private citizens from all parts of our country, there are to-day in the hands of our committee the joint resolutions of four State Legislatures, setting forth the evils of Chinese immigration, and urging upon Congress the necessity for prompt and vigorous relief. Four sovereign States of this Union—California, Oregon, Nevada, and Colorado—the young, patriotic, and progressive children of the far West, who have borne your laws and customs and carried the banner of your civilization to the utmost verge of your possessions, braving the perils of the savage wilderness and its still more savage men; States which have poured into your coffers their treasures of silver and gold, enabling you to maintain your credit and honor among the nations of the earth, now stand before you witnesses to the blighting evils of Chinese immigration and petitioners for relief at your hands.

VOTE OF CALIFORNIA AND NEVADA.

I hold in my hand a proclamation under the broad seal of the State of California, announcing its official action upon this subject.

On the 3d day of September, 1879, the Legislature of California submitted the question of Chinese immigration to the vote. There were 883 votes for and 154,638 against Chinese immigration, showing an anti-Chinese majority of 153,755.

When it is known that this is within a fraction of the entire vote of the State, and that under the laws of California the secrecy and sanctity of the ballot are more successfully guarded than by any other government in the world, the force of such a popular verdict is greatly intensified. In Nevada, upon a similar test, out of 17,000 votes cast there were only 300 in favor of Chinese immigration. Will you heed the voice of these States, coming to you unanimously through their representatives in both Houses of Congress and through the more authoritative resolutions of their legislative assemblies, or will you reject their united testimony and suffer the dead body of an effete civilization to block the highway of their progress? Will you permit the repulsive specter of Asiatic squalor, vice, and servitude to stand at the gateways of the West to drive back the teeming millions of Caucasian immigrants who are now pressing toward its fertile plains? If you will, you do it against their best interests and in the face of their solemn protest.

THE EAST RESPONDS TO THE WEST.

Nor is this strong evidence against Chinese immigration confined to the Pacific slope. I venture to assert that the unanimity of sentiment upon this subject which now prevails in the West would find its parallel in the extreme East—in the North or in the South under like conditions. Nor is this a mere conjecture.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] in his clear and forcible argument of yesterday, referred to the imaginary dangers which might arise from Chinese immigration, and ironically complimented my committee colleague [Mr. PAGE] upon his Quixotic attack upon the Chinese, comparing it to the world-renowned "battle on the wind-mills." He also alluded to the "alarming fact that by the census of 1880, among 50,000,000 of American people there are mingled 105,000 Chinamen."

It is known to this House that in the State of California, as shown by the same census, the Chinese number one-half the adult voting population of the State. It is equally well known that they have a residence in that State of over twenty-five years.

I desire now, as showing the prompt and spontaneous action of the East as compared with the slow and plodding habits of the West, to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to an episode in the history of his own State, in which not seventy-five thousand as in California, but seventy-five Chinamen were involved, who were residents, not for twenty-five years, but for twenty-five days when these events occurred.

About twelve years ago a wealthy shoe firm at North Adams, Massachusetts, had some trouble with their employés. The Chinese were invited to fill the places made vacant by the rebellious Crispins. They were not only invited but they came; they not only came but they saw, and for the time being they conquered. How was their coming and residence greeted? How did the conduct of our eastern friends compare with their brethren of the far West? Is it not an established fact that when the coming of these Chinese was understood, threats of violence were freely bandied about, even before they had begun their eastward journey? Is it not equally well known as a part of the current history of that day that excited crowds assembled at the principal cities on the line of their journey, and that their arrival at those cities was met with jeers, hootings, and threats of personal violence? At Troy, in the State of New York, and elsewhere, excited individuals entered the car where the Chinese were peacefully quartered, and, brandishing their weapons, were only prevented by force from taking human life. How were they received and what was their experience at their place of destination?

The town of North Adams is one of the most secluded and conservative villages of the old Bay State. Located in a most charming and romantic spot, almost under a lofty range of mountains, sheltered from the winds of winter, and shaded in summer by densest foliage of innumerable trees,

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,

it seemed dedicated to the genius of peace, law, and good order. Its numerous churches, with spires pointing heavenward like the hopes and aspirations of its God-fearing citizens, stood as sentinels to guard the safety and guarantee the happiness of every stranger who entered its gates. Here, then, if anywhere, it would seem that the high and holy influence of law, patriotism, and religion would have secured to these seventy-five Chinese laborers immunity from insult and personal violence, if it did not guarantee them the equal rights and privileges of citizenship. But such was not the case. Here, as elsewhere, the instinctive feeling of humanity, which has asserted itself whenever and wherever the Caucasian and Mongolian races have come in contact, overthrew law, traditions, sentimentalities and religion to which gentlemen have so eloquently alluded. The breezes from their mountain heights in those late June days came, but with them no "healing on their wings."

I find from the historian of the times that even in that quiet "village of the plain," many of whose ancestry doubtless knelt at Plymouth Rock, a reign of terror was inaugurated. When the train reached its destination at North Adams, an immense crowd had gathered. Shouts of derisive laughter were intermingled with groans and imprecations. "Crispins in other towns," so says the historian of this event, "who came there and worked awhile were compelled by fears of personal violence to leave the town." The Chinese were "kept away from the village for prudential reasons." Even when compelled to go out to make purchases of food and garments it was necessary for them to be "properly guarded from insult." Monster meetings of workingmen were held at North Adams, throughout the State, and in all the leading cities of the Eastern slope. Intense excitement prevailed. The press and the forum were ablaze with defenses and denunciations of the Chinese. The war of races was transferred from the West to the East, passion and "prejudice" ruled the hour. The great leaders of the Republican party were divided in their counsels. While Charles Sumner—who was so glowingly eulogized yesterday—stood devotedly and consistently by the "lords of the loom," that other great leader of Massachusetts' thought and politics, who was not alluded to—Henry Wilson, then a Senator from that State, and afterward Vice-President of the United States—springing as he did from the loins of the people, and knowing and sympathizing with their wants, made a noble and emphatic stand against Chinese immigration. From his place in the Senate of the United States, when Mr. Stewart attempted to call up his anti-Chinese bill, (S. No. 973,) Mr. Wilson declared:

I think the time has come when we should have some action upon this subject; for it does seem to me at the present day that there is a conspiracy of capital in this country to cast a drag-net over creation for the purpose of bringing degraded labor here to lower and degrade our laboring-men. And I think it is time to meet that question.

These words were uttered on the 23d of June, 1870, over eleven years ago, and at a time when, as the census shows, there were only ninety-three Chinese in the State which he represented. They will be accepted not only as an index to the feeling then prevailing upon this subject, but in view of what has since occurred as a striking evidence of his sound, practical, and far-seeing statesmanship.

MASSACHUSETTS PROCLAIMS THROUGH TWO CONVENTIONS HER OPPOSITION TO CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

In the same year, 1870, the people of Massachusetts still more authoritatively expressed their condemnation of Chinese immigration. Two political conventions adopted resolutions against it. The Labor Reform party held a convention at Worcester on the 8th of September, which was attended by two hundred and fifty delegates.

Mr. TUCKER. What year was that?

Mr. WILLIS. In the year 1870. On the 11th March, 1862, the Legislature of California, after twelve years' experience with the Chinese, through a joint select committee made a report whose concluding sentences I will read:

We have not the power nor should it be our policy to shut ourselves out from one of the most magnificent openings of the age. We hope soon to be connected with Asia by a line of steam vessels, which will enable us to become better acquainted with this wonderful people. Let us stay action, gather facts, study effects, enlighten ourselves and our constituents, and at the right time and in the right manner take such steps as will conduce to the greatest good of the greatest number. Our nearness and intimate connection with this industrious, numerous, and cultivated family of mankind may enable us to confer blessings on the whole human family. If a partial Providence endows us with ten talents let us use them to gain other ten; and let us infuse into our benighted neighbors the blessings of that higher and purer civilization which we feel we were destined to establish over the whole earth.

Such were the feelings and views of the representatives of California in 1862 toward their "benighted neighbors," after twelve years' endurance of their presence. Let us see what the representatives of this convention say in the year 1870, after three months' experience of these same neighbors. Here is their resolution:

Resolved, That while we welcome voluntary immigrants from every clime, and pledge them the protection of our laws and equal opportunity in every field of industry, still we are inflexibly opposed to the importation by capitalists of laborers from China and elsewhere for the purpose of degrading and cheapening American labor, and will resist it by all legal and constitutional means in our power.

On the 12th of October of the same year, 1870, the Democratic party held a convention at Fitchburgh.

Mr. PAGE. What State was that?

Mr. WILLIS. In the State of Massachusetts. I read from their platform the following:

Resolved, That, independently of the question as to the expediency of bringing into intimate political and social relations two adverse races of men, we believe it to be wrong to stimulate by artificial means the irruption into our community of swarms of Mongolians, who have neither the wish nor the aptitude to assume the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, and are brought here by interested capitalists only as so much bone and muscle to lower the dignity of labor, degrade the condition of our workingmen, and create and perpetuate distinct classes in our social system.

The standard-bearers selected by these respective gubernatorial conventions were Wendell Phillips and John Quincy Adams, names worthy to stand on the long roll of worthy citizens whom Massachusetts delights to honor. They went to the people with these issues, and received out of a total of 151,237 the sum of 71,482 votes, or within a fraction of one-half of all the votes cast.

We are warranted, therefore, in saying that if such resolutions indorsed by such a vote resulted from the coming of seventy-five Chinese eleven years ago, it is satisfactory evidence that the humanity of the East, when put to the test, is as much opposed to this class of immigrants as the humanity of the West.

ACTION OF POLITICAL PARTIES.

Nor has the feeling of opposition to the Chinese been confined either to the East or the West. Our national platforms attest the universal sentiment in the same direction. In 1876 the Republican national platform declared that "it is the immediate duty of Congress to fully investigate the effects of the immigration and importation of Mongolians upon the morals and material interests of the country." The Democracy, in their national convention of the same year, took even stronger ground in the same direction. Under the title of the "Shield of American citizenship," as the document was officially put forth, the Democratic national platform of 1876 declared:

Reform is necessary to correct the errors of our treaties and our diplomacy which have exposed our brethren of the Pacific coast to the incursions of a race not sprung from the same great parent stock, and in fact now, by law, denied citizenship through naturalization, as being neither accustomed to the traditions of a progressive civilization nor exercised in liberty under equal laws. * * * We denounce the policy which thus tolerates a revival of the cooly trade in Mongolian men, held to perform servile labor contracts, and demand such modification of the treaty with the Chinese Empire, or such legislation within constitutional limitations, as shall prevent further importation or immigration of the Mongolian race.

These resolutions in the platform of 1876 were substantially indorsed by the platforms of every political party in the last campaign—Greenback, Republican, and Democratic.

In view of these formal declarations of all parties, discussed and approved as they were at every political gathering in the country; in view of the experience of California and Massachusetts, can it be denied that the free, unprejudiced, deliberate, and almost unanimous judgment of the United States is adverse to Chinese immigration. Is not such judgment worthy of the gravest and most careful consideration by this House?

EVERY NATION OPPOSED TO CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Especially should it be respected, Mr. Speaker, when we know that it is confirmed and enforced by that of every country in the world where the Chinese have found a lodgment. In Java, in Siam, in Singapore, in the Philipine Islands, and in the Australian colonies, as the records show, the same opposition has been aroused and the same results realized which we to-day see upon the Pacific slope. Everywhere they have made themselves obnoxious; everywhere heavy penalties and restrictive legislation have been found necessary means of protection. In Java the Chinese have lived for hundreds of years, but this long residence has neither diminished nor destroyed the objectionable features of their character. Years ago they were declared by the official authorities to be a very "dangerous people," a "pest to the country," for which the only remedy was their expulsion. As far back as 1855 the English colony of Victoria levied a capitation tax of $50 upon every Chinese immigrant. In 1861 a similar tax was imposed by the colony of New South Wales, and in 1877 by the colony of Queensland, and also by the French colony of Saigon. The opinion which this bill impliedly expresses is, therefore, the opinion of the world. In every land restrictive laws such as this have been found necessary.

GROUNDS FOR RESTRICTIVE LEGISLATION STATED.

The briefest inquiry, Mr. Speaker, into the reasons for such legislation will show both its propriety and its necessity. The Chinaman, whether as a laborer, as a member of society, or of the body-politic, is an undesirable and dangerous element in any community. Crowded, huddled together, forty or fifty in a room not larger than would accommodate with decency and comfort one man with a family, discarding or disregarding all the usual ordinary appliances of personal civilization as to diet and clothing; cooking, eating, and sleeping in the same apartment, they have succeeded in reducing the cost of living to a minimum, and thus wherever located have forced the laboring classes to the wall. As laborers, therefore, the Chinese can only exist to the exclusion or degradation of all others in the community.

Nor as members of society are they less objectionable. The personal habits consequent upon their mode of life in these squalid dens, their low, groveling ideas of virtue and religion, and their peculiar social views have been commented upon and condemned by every nation with whom they have come in contact.

As members of the body-politic the complaints against them have been equally strong and widespread. Nearly fifty years ago we find the Government of Java complaining that they form a distinct class, refusing to mingle with or be absorbed by the society around them; preserving their own costume, their own habits, traditions, social organization, and nationality.

DEGRADED LABOR DESTRUCTIVE TO A SELF-GOVERNING COMMUNITY.

The objections to the Chinese, whether from an industrial, social, or political stand-point, are worthy of serious consideration in any community. In a self-governing one, however, such as ours, they deserve especial attention. Here, if anywhere, it should be the aim of the Government, of its legislative representatives, to elevate the dignity and preserve the self-respect of all its citizens. As are the people, so will be the government. If the people are corrupt, if they are ignorant, selfish, or unpatriotic, the government will reflect these ignoble traits in its own features.

The introduction, therefore, of a class of men like the Chinese, who are without homes or families, whose education and habits disqualify them for citizenship, whose cheap wages degrade labor, and whose want of morality and self-respect unfit them for society, is fraught with great danger to our republican institutions, and should be promptly and effectually checked.

We say in theory to our citizens that they are to be protected in all their rights and privileges; we say to them in theory that the Government respects and honors labor—honors the bone and sinew of the land. How, then, can we hope to secure a bold, defiant, independent citizenship among the laboring-men who comprise four-fifths of our population, if we declare to them by our conduct, by our practical legislation, that these generous theories are but myths, but glittering generalities? Shall we subject them to a competition—to a mode of life—that will make these grand and inspiring truths utter impossibilities? Shall we say to them that the rights and honors of American citizenship are one thing, and their possession, their enjoyment another and a different thing? Shall we, in other words, compel any class of our fellow-citizens to surrender church, home, and school to become mere "hewers of wood and drawers of water" by subjecting them to the shame and degradation which curse the Chinese laborer?

I hope and believe that no such declaration will ever go forth from this body, but that we will recognize the equal rights and dignity of all our citizens by the prompt passage of this bill.

POLITICAL REASONS FOR PASSAGE OF THE BILL.

Such a result is demanded by political no less than by industrial considerations. We welcome to our shores all who desire or intend to make this their home, or who expect to become permanent citizens of our Government. The German, the Irish, the French, and other immigrants to our country have quickly and successfully adapted themselves to our institutions. Prompt to defend the honor and to promote the interests of their adopted land, yielding cheerful and ready obedience to its laws and customs, they have illustrated in their lives and vindicated by their conduct the wise policy of immigration. As kindred drops of water, they have mingled and been lost in the great stream of American life. The Chinese have no such intention or experience. They do not come to seek homes. They disdain to accept our institutions; they look with contempt upon our social customs; they defy the authority of our laws; they retain all the distinctive features and characteristics of their national life. Twenty-five years of residence and contact with our people have left them unchanged and unimproved in any important particular. The argument, then, based upon a comparison of this race with our Irish and German fellow-citizens is utterly without foundation. The Chinese, unlike them, have always been and always will be an alien element in our midst. We want no such servile and degraded class in our Government. We want a brave, patriotic, self-reliant, assimilative citizenship.

CONCLUSION.

Only when we have secured such a citizenship may we look for the full development of the noble truths, the fulfillment of the grand destiny of our Republic. Then will we have laid its foundations broad and deep, upon the virtue and intelligence of its people. Then, too, may we hope that America—rejecting the stagnant blood of of Asiatic servitude, but transmuting into herself the best life of other nationalities, following out the growth of those civilizing agencies which are already at work, prompt to protect the interests and defend the rights of all her children—America will move down the "solemn pathway of the ages," the guardian and exemplar of civil and religious liberty, her name coupled with the grateful prayers of the patriots of every land, and illustrated by the honors most worthy of a nation; her hand wielding the scepter of a wise and beneficient legislation; her brow wreathed with the imperishable chaplet of virtue, and her mountains and rich valleys vocal with the glad shouts of an hundred million of free, equal, happy, self-reliant, liberty-loving, and intelligent citizens.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. PACHECO.) The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. CASSIDY.]

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, we admit the great gravity of the question under consideration. We admit that it is a new departure in the history and the policy of the Government of the United States. But for these grave features it would not be deemed necessary to enter upon the discussion of the subject at great length; for all political parties are solemnly pledged to the performance of what is sought to be achieved by the passage of this bill.

In 1876, at Saint Louis, the great Democratic party in national convention assembled, with every State in the Union represented, said in bold, terse terms that there should be no more Chinese immigration to this country. In the same year, and but a few days later, the Republican party, meeting under like auspices, said substantially the same thing. Again, in 1880, both parties in their national conventions reaffirmed the same doctrine, and once more renewed their pledges that there must be speedy restrictive legislation on this vital question. It is unnecessary to again read these pledges. They have been repeated again and again in connection with this discussion, and are known of all men. So we have the two great opposing parties of this country on the record both favoring a common purpose. Nay, more than this, I am reliably informed that the Greenback party also included in its platform a plank against the further coming of the Asiatic horde. I am thankful that the Greenback party took that position. It is at least one sensible thing to pass to its credit.

A fourth party which has recently come into existence and power in the grand historic Old Dominion beyond the Potomac I have not heard from, but from its peculiar tenets I think I may feel justified in assuming that it likewise will join with us in repudiating the class at which this legislation is directed; that it will stand shoulder to shoulder with the other great parties of the country in staying and turning back the tide of barbarism that has been flowing in upon us uninterruptedly for thirty years.

Mr. PAUL. May I interrupt the gentleman?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield?

Mr. CASSIDY. For a question, yes, sir.

Mr. PAUL. As the gentleman has traveled outside of the record in this discussion to assail the character of my State and the party which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor——

Mr. CASSIDY. If the gentleman will permit me, I have not assailed anybody or anybody's party.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield?

Mr. CASSIDY. I do not yield for the gentleman to interject a speech into mine.

Mr. PAUL. I only wish to correct the gentleman's statement by assuring him that there will be a plank in our platform in opposition to Chinese immigration when we hold our national convention.

Mr. CASSIDY. I accept the gentleman's apology. I am glad to hear that the new party across the Potomac promises to develop one redeeming sentiment. But the gentleman misunderstood me. I was merely referring to the attitude of political parties on this question. I had a right to discuss it in that light. I intended no offense to any individual. I was speaking of parties in the aggregate. I thank the gentleman most heartily for the assurance that the new party is all right on this bill. We have now got all of the parties in, and the bill ought to pass unanimously if the pledges of political conventions go for anything, because everybody is committed in its favor. We are all pledged to do precisely what this bill says shall be done. There should in reality be no division among us, and little or no cause for discussion.

The case must have been made up fully and unanswerably or otherwise all of these great political parties would not have taken position, as I have shown they did. Neither the country nor parties proclaim to the world that a thing should be done until they have made up their minds to that effect. Hence these platforms to which I have called attention, in ordinary cases and under ordinary circumstances would be deemed conclusive of the whole argument. But this is regarded as an extraordinary case, and hence it is that gentlemen are beset with doubts and desire time for a most exhaustive examination and discussion of the subject in all of its bearings. The friends of the measure are anxious to extend the utmost limit of debate, to the end that correct conclusions may be reached. We are confident in the strength of our position and the justice of our cause, and hence we entertain no fear that any portion of our lines can be successfully assailed or carried.

It has occurred to my mind that gentlemen who have treated this subject, both here and in the other end of this Capitol, (the Senate,) have taken entirely too restricted a view of the question at issue. Without an exception, they treat it as a question local to California and the Pacific coast. Nothing was ever further from the real facts in the case. It is in no sense a local question, but a great national question, as broad as this Union itself. True, California and the Pacific coast have thus far been the principal sufferers from this terrible evil, but in the absence of restrictive legislation, such as is here proposed, the day is not distant, and cannot be, when our unfortunate experience will be shared by every community throughout the length and breadth of the land. With a population of 450,000,000 to draw upon, the numerical ability of the Chinese Empire to literally submerge us beneath a tidal wave of vice, disease, and barbarism cannot be denied. And the will, the disposition, is not lacking.

The census demonstrates that Chinese immigration is steadily increasing. No doubt the tide has been checked in some measure by the unceasing agitation on the Pacific slope. But defeat this bill, throw wide open the Golden Gate, and no man can predict the end; no man can foretell the ultimate effect on the freedom and civilization of this country. For I say to our brethren of the East, without passion, without prejudice, without hatred, but as the result of calm deliberation and observation, covering a period of a quarter of a century on the Pacific coast, that for weal or for woe, their action on this bill is destined to affect, in a material sense, every essential of liberty and free government in America down through all the coming ages. If this undesirable element is ever to be checked now is the time to do it. We cannot risk the chances of the future. Public sentiment is subject to marvelous changes. Wealth and monopoly, the allies of cheap labor, are daily and hourly gaining greater power over the people. We cannot give the monopolists time to manufacture a pro-Chinese sentiment in this country. They will do it if the opportunity is afforded them. There is no safety beyond the present. We must act now in the interest of the present and future generations.

The people of the Pacific coast are a broad, brave, and generous people. They are your brethren. Every State and every clime under the sun is represented there. The flower of all your States went with the rush to the golden Pacific. They are liberty-loving and loyal citizens of this great Republic. Not a man among that splendid throng is capable of an ungenerous deed or thought. Contact with all races of men has lifted them high above the prejudices of race. And these are the men and people, nearly 2,000,000 strong, who bear overwhelming testimony to the unmitigated evil of Chinese immigration. No selfish motive or unworthy purpose animates them. They come as American citizens; they come as intelligent and unbiased witnesses; they come as your brothers; they come as the guardians of your liberties, of your civilization, of your welfare and progress, on the outposts and westerly confines of this glorious Union, in whose strength and grandeur and destiny they have a common interest, appealing and supplicating not in a restricted local sense, as has been unjustly attributed to them, but as ardent lovers of this whole country, proud of its past glories and hopeful of its future achievements, they come, I say, this people, this matchless people, as one man, irrespective of party, irrespective of religion or creed, irrespective of sex or sect, beseeching you to pass this bill and spare the land of the fathers, the land of liberty, the land of Washington, of Jefferson, and of Madison, from the merciless ravages of a devastating foe, though insidiously peaceful, not less dangerous to our free institutions and the high standard of civilization born of freedom and free men than an openly hostile enemy, possessed of every equipment and engine of modern warfare, marching resistlessly on and on, against a hapless and helpless people, to the inevitable overthrow and extinction of all!

Such are the people of the Pacific coast and such is the cause they represent. The case is not overstated. We religiously believe that unrestricted Mongolian immigration means ultimate destruction. Self-preservation is the first law of nature and of nations. The friends of this measure plant themselves on this broad ground. The mere statement of the doctrine suggests every argument necessary to its support. Indeed, our right under the Constitution and treaty has not been seriously controverted. The enemies of the bill mainly predicate their opposition to it on the question of public policy. They also mix a good deal of sentiment with their policy. I have followed the literature of this case pretty closely since the bill came on for hearing in the other end of this building, and I have yet to discover the first sound practical reason why the bill should not become a law.

The framers of the Constitution say in the preamble that they ordained that instrument to "insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessing of liberty." To whom? To themselves and their posterity. There is nothing in this grant that implies that we shall embrace in our nationality the people of all lands. On the contrary, the fathers seem to have been looking out chiefly for themselves and their own people. We do not violate in our bill any principle of the preamble or the Constitution itself. European immigration is desirable and we welcome it. But we are to bear in mind that "domestic tranquillity" and "the general welfare" are among the objects for which this Government was especially created. Either provision is fatal to the Chinese. There can be no "tranquillity" while they continue to come. They are a disturbing element and must always remain so because of their non-assimilative habits and customs. That they are not promotive of "the general welfare" is equally certain. Nor can they ever be as long as they content themselves with eating out our substance and breaking down our free system by driving our poor men and women from every avenue of remunerative employment.

And now a word about the new treaty. That instrument gives us the right to "regulate, limit, restrict, or suspend" the coming of Chinese immigrants to this country. China has agreed with the Government of the United States that we may do any of these four things—"regulate, limit, restrict, or suspend." We have concluded to apply the latter remedy, and hence we say in our bill that no new coolies shall come to this country for twenty years. Gentlemen on the other side hold up their hands and say this is entirely too severe; that it is not a reasonable exercise of the power of suspension. They want to reduce the time to ten years. Ten years would meet the ordinary dickerings and temporary expedients of individuals very well, but I submit that when applied to two great nations it would not comport with the dignity and power of the high contracting parties. As compared with the life of nations, twenty years is a brief period, particularly in comparison with the life of the Chinese Empire, which has endured for more than 5,000 years. Our own Government also has entered upon its second century. A ten-year suspension would hardly restore "tranquillity" on the Pacific coast. The agitation would have to be kept alive to insure a second suspension at the expiration of the first. Nothing short of twenty years will afford us the relief and repose which our people and section so earnestly desire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CASSIDY. I would like to have a few minutes more.

Mr. PAGE. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman from Nevada to conclude his remarks. He represents a State that is greatly interested in this matter.

Mr. CASSIDY. I am booked for an hour further down the list, which time I will yield to other gentlemen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to granting further time to the gentleman from Nevada?

Mr. TAYLOR. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CASSIDY. Perhaps half an hour; I have no set speech upon the subject. I am talking without premeditation or preparation.

There was no objection, and further time was granted.

Mr. CASSIDY. I was saying that one of the points made against this bill is the assumed fact that we are not reasonably exercising the power granted under the treaty. That is wholly a matter of opinion. No man has a right to assume that the Emperor of China will regard the twenty-year limit as an act of unfriendliness, especially to the extent of causing a disturbance in our commercial relations and intercourse with that empire. We have fixed, as we think, a reasonable time during which coolies shall not come to our shores. They have had the free run of this country for thirty years, coming and going at will, and now we say they must give us twenty years of quiet and rest. That is all there is to this bill, and I submit that the requirement is neither harsh nor unreasonable. So much for the unreasonableness of this enactment.

Now we come to the second objection. I have never heard but about three, but the second is where we get the poetry of sentiment; that is the place where the universal fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man comes in. I am not going to dispute that brotherly theory, because I do not know any more about it than those who bring it forward. It is not essential to this discussion to go into the history of all of our poor relations.

"All men are created equal, and endowed with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," says the immortal Declaration of Independence. And this is used with persistent and masterly effect, in the interest of the coolies brought hither under servile contracts as degrading as human slavery itself, by the opponents of this bill.

I have always been considerably in doubt about that equality clause in the Declaration. I have never been able to reconcile that sentiment with the course of the men who promulgated it immediately thereafter. I am charitable enough to believe they builded broader than they knew, else how are we to reconcile the facts that there were more than a half million of human beings in slavery in the colonies when the Declaration was adopted, and that within less than fifteen years the Constitution was framed, substantially by the same minds, containing a specific provision continuing the African slave trade down to and including 1808. Here are acts by the same patriotic men, performed at about the same time, which seem irreconcilable. It is hard to believe that these sturdy, good men declared a living principle, and then ignored it for personal advantage and gain. I have always entertained a better opinion of them than that. Hence I have been forced to conclude that that equality clause was not written with a view to the equality or non-equality of the various races of the earth. I do not believe the author had anything of the kind in his mind when he penned the charter of our liberties.

The circumstances surrounding him at the time deserve to be considered. The sovereign of Great Britain was insisting on his claim to rule over this country by the divine right of kings; that the superior quality of his blood gave to him rights and powers not enjoyed by other men. It was this claim that the author of the Declaration set out to combat. He did not believe that any man in the Old World possessed the inherent right to rule the men who had experienced untold hardship and peril in subduing the new; and so he went to work to tell King George that his assumption of authority on this side of the Atlantic was a piece of usurpation. To make himself clearly understood he had to assail the divine-right theory in straightforward terms; he had to say that "all men are created equal;" that no man has a right to set up as a hereditary sovereign to rule over a people; that one baby is as much a king when born as another baby; that the brain and heart and conscience made the man, and made them all equal in the matter of kingly attributes. That was the doctrine that was proclaimed; nothing more, and nothing less.

Our Massachusetts friends may assert that the Chinaman is as good as anybody else, and is entitled to come here and enjoy the rare blessings of our free institutions under the equality clause hurled at King George in our Declaration of Independence, but still that does not make him a safe or desirable acquisition to our population. I assert that there is neither social nor moral nor intellectual equality anywhere under the sun, and I do not draw the line on the color of the man's skin either. There are grades everywhere. If I am credibly informed, and I believe I am, our colored fellow-citizens right here in Washington have an aristocratic circle to which the less fortunate and less favored colored brother cannot gain admittance on such close and cordial terms as would lend force to the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] on the universal brotherhood theory. I am not finding fault with respectable colored people because they refuse to associate with vagabonds of their own race on terms of perfect equality. Neither are white people to be criticised for similar distinctions. But the fact remains that there is not in this country now and never will be that broad and promiscuous equality which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] who addressed the House yesterday asserted to be a principle in the organic law of the land as fixed as the stars in their course. Now, with all of his sentiment on this subject, I should not hesitate to wager that there are one thousand men in his own district in Massachusetts, may be ten thousand, whom he will not meet on terms of social intercourse and perfect equality.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman from Nevada refer to me?

Mr. CASSIDY. I do, sir.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I would be sorry to believe that there is any member of this House who would feel himself above meeting any of his constituents upon terms of equality.

Mr. CASSIDY. That is more sentiment; but the gentleman can have his own way about it. I have no objection. But I know, Mr. Speaker, and so does every one in this presence know, that the equality gush we have been compelled to endure at both ends of this Capitol since the discussion of this Chinese bill began has no practical application or illustration anywhere in this country as society is constructed to-day. We are all equal before the law; the same laws are made for all; political equality is attainable, and I beg to assure gentlemen on the other side that I will go as far as the most radical of them in securing these natural and political rights to all men entitled to enjoy them under our laws without regard to race, color, or previous condition. In no respect is the line to be drawn at color. A respectable and self-respecting colored man is better than an unworthy white man who may be destitute of these qualities. The heart and conscience and brain and moral worth and energy make the man under our new system and new civilization, and not the color of the skin.

And just here let it be stated that the rights of the colored people of this country are in no sense invaded or threatened by the terms of this bill or the spirit which it breathes. It is aimed at a non-voting, non-progressive, and non-assimilative people, who have no attachments for this country or its institutions save the sordid desire of bettering their condition in a pecuniary sense. No Chinaman ever came to this country because he hated oppression and loved liberty. He comes in every instance for the almighty dollar, and is incapable of an inspiration or aspiration beyond this. None of these things will lie against the citizen of African descent any more than against the man of Caucasian blood. Hence the colored man is in no way affected, and he need not be in any way disturbed. The discussion of races indeed had no proper place in this debate. It was dragged in by the sentimental gentlemen who preach equality in its broadest sense, but fail to practice it in its most restricted sense. We are not legislating against the Chinaman because his skin is yellow; we have no objection to that; but we are against him because of the civilization which he brings with him and which he refuses to abandon after years of residence among us. Colors have nothing whatever to do with this subject, and I should never have alluded to them but for the purpose of controverting some of the issues raised by our New England friends, both here and in the Senate. Your naturalization laws as they stand to-day exclude the Chinaman from citizenship, and we say that if he is not desirable as a citizen he is not desirable in any other sense or for any other purpose. They are a people without a religion, without a conscience, and without a God. There is no honesty among the men or virtue among the women. I mean to refer of course solely to the class which comes within the scope of this bill.

And now as to the third and last point made by the honorable gentleman [Mr. RICE] against the provisions and purposes of this measure. He painted the great benefits resulting from an unfettered commerce. He showed that two principal benefits come to nations from untrammeled commercial intercourse, namely, wealth and enlightenment. Both propositions are true when applied to nations whose civilization is equally advanced. But I deny that our people have anything to learn from Asia; I deny that they can be benefited or lifted up intellectually by the contact, and I also deny that the advantages to the two countries are mutual and reciprocal. We may impart in some degree the examples of our civilization and energy and enterprise, but we can get nothing in return for them. Hence the advantages are all on one side, and, as usual, the heathen has the best of the bargain. This brings our commercial relations with China down to a dollar-and-cent proposition, and I am sorry to find any gentleman on this floor, from New England or elsewhere, who is willing to place the civilization of his country and the liberties and happiness and general welfare of his people in the balance against the paltry dollar. It is a narrow, sordid, unworthy sentiment.

But we do not interfere with the commercial relations between this country and China, except in the indirect way incident to the inhibition we place on the cooly by this bill. We leave those relations intact, just as they have always stood. But my Massachusetts friend is unfortunate in alluding to the incidental injury resulting to commerce from placing restrictions upon it. He builds a high wall of protection all along our sea-coast for the exclusive benefit of the home manufacturer as against the free commerce of all the world; and when we undertake to exclude a certain class of people we are met with the argument that we are going to strike down the commerce of the Orient. If we can only maintain it at the expense of degradation to our own people and civilization, I for one say, let it go down, never to rise again. We get nothing from that direction that is absolutely indispensable. As between the liberties of a people and commercial barter there can be but one choice. But my protectionist friend seemed to lose sight of the fact that the exclusion proposed in this bill is direct protection to American labor. That is the best aspect of the bill. It gives the laborer immediate and direct protection. He does not receive it in the second degree, if at all, as in the case where the protection is laid on the product of labor mainly for the benefit of the capital which employs it.

Our protectionist friends of New England want a high protective tariff for all they have to sell, their manufactured articles, and a free, open market in which to buy that which they most require, labor. That seems to be their theory and position. And yet they never hesitate to tell us that they favor the tariff simply as a means of benefiting the American laborer. They will never again have the opportunity of voting for a bill which will confer as great protection and direct personal benefit on the laborers of the country as this. It goes directly to the point, and ought to strike protectionists, if they mean what they say, in the most favorable light possible. No man holding to that faith and policy with any decent showing of consistency can afford to record his vote against this bill.

One word further in reply to another point raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts; and my remarks are mainly in reply to him, because I must pay him the compliment of having made by far the ablest argument yet advanced in either House in opposition to the measure. He seemed greatly shocked at the passport system provided in this bill. We require the excepted classes to make the showing that they are permitted to come; that they are not of the prohibited or suspended class. There is nothing particularly wrong about this, and certainly it works no great hardship. But my friend says we do not treat the subjects of other "favored nations" in that way. Of course we do not. There is no cause for it. There are no conditions in the treaties between the United States and other favored nations. When a man lands on our shores that is the end of it. All are privileged to come. Not so with China. Under the treaty of 1880 some may come and some may not; hence, the line must be drawn. There must be a system of identification and the condition in the treaty naturally carries with it the power of enforcement, else it would be a nullity on its face and not worth the paper it is written on.

There is another class of gentlemen here who are objecting to the term skilled laborer as used in the bill. I want to assure them that nobody is going to be hurt by that provision. No skilled mechanics come to this country from China. I never heard of a carpenter or blacksmith or shoemaker coming here. The whole truth is that cooly and laborer, as used in the bill, are synonymous terms. A cooly is a laborer and a laborer is a cooly. There is no choice between them. All of them are bad, all of them are slaves; they come to this country as slaves. On this point I desire to have read an extract from a letter from Mr. Baily, consul at Hong-Kong in 1871. The letter is from the State Department, and therefore authentic. It shows what kind of people come to this country, and how they come. The Clerk will oblige me by reading that portion which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The subject of Chinese emigration from this port to the United States has claimed my careful thought and patient investigation for the last four months, with a view to get at the facts and to understand it in its surroundings and bearings. The whole subject is an anomaly. Rules that will do elsewhere in the world, when applied in considering questions of immigration, have no application to Chinese immigration to the United States. Immigrants to America from other parts of the world go of their own volition, free and voluntary. Emigration from China to all parts of the world is an organized business or trade, in which men of large capital and hongs of great wealth engage as a regular traffic, by which men are bought and sold for so much per head, precisely as a piece of merchandise is handled, at its market value. The poor laborer of Europe applies his own scanty means to get to the land of promise or is assisted by his friends, charitable societies, or benevolent institutions to reach a place where he hopes to have his toil properly requited, where his labor will inure to his own benefit.

The cooly of China is bought by the rich trader to serve his purchaser at low wages for a series of years in a foreign country under contract, for the faithful performance of which in many instances he gives a mortgage on his wife and children, with a stipulation that at the end of his term of service he is to be brought back to China by his purchaser. This contract is sold by the dealer through his agents in the United States and elsewhere at a large advance, and is a source of great profit to the capitalists who have the means to buy and sell large numbers of men. This contract in the United States is no doubt null and void, but nevertheless the cooly will comply strictly with all its terms, a copy of which in Chinese characters is always in his possession, and this he will do because his purchaser holds his household lares in the land to which he always hopes and expects to return in pledge for the faithful performance of his bonds. The central idea of a Chinaman's religion, if he has any religion at all, is that of the worship of the tombs of his ancestors. The superstitions of Fung-Shuey dominate him wherever he may be in the world. The subtile mysticisms of China, so strangely governing all its people in their social, political, and quasi-religious life, are as a hook in his nose, by which his purchaser controls him at all times and in all places; and thus this relation of master and quasi-slave, no matter how many miles apart, is welded by the mystical links of religious superstitions, family ties, and rights of ancestral tombs, which control and regulate the reciprocal duties of trader and cooly in the home land.

The means of obtaining coolies are as various as the ingenuity of man can devise, and are as corrupt as the incentive to large gains can stimulate and invent. Men and boys are decoyed by all sorts of tricks, opiates, and illusory promises into the haunts of the traders. Once in the clutches of these men-dealers, by a system of treachery and terrorism connived at by the local Chinese authorities, whose chief business in life is to "squeeze" the people, the stupefied cooly is overawed into making a contract under such Chinese influences and surroundings as to give it a sacredness of character nowhere else known in the world. From that moment he is the mere tool of the rich dealer wherever he may go. It is difficult for persons accustomed to western civilization to understand the depth and extent of this relationship; but Chinese civilization is unique, perhaps opaque, and cannot be measured by that of any other.

Mr. CASSIDY. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the class of people who come to this country from China. They are accurately described in that letter. They come here under contract as slaves. They come here with the contracts in their pockets written in Chinese characters, which, under their peculiar superstitions, they are bound to respect and obey. But, more than this, they maintain among themselves tribunals separate and distinct and unknown and unsanctioned by our laws, through which every one of these contracts can be enforced. What other class of immigrants would be permitted to set up courts of their own inside of our jurisdiction? And I desire to call especial attention to this matter, as it is one of the strongest points going to show that these people are unfitted for our form of government, unfitted to make good citizens. They are not only servile slaves but strangers to liberty. These contracts to which I have alluded each and every one of them contains a stipulation that the bones of the maker must be returned to the Flowery Kingdom in the event of death on this side. And this is the class of people whom some gentlemen on this floor are contending should be permitted to come to this country in unlimited numbers to compete in the labor markets against our free men and free women.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a moment to ask him if he would be willing to yield the floor at this time with the privilege of concluding his remarks hereafter?

Mr. CASSIDY. It is hardly necessary. I will be through in a few moments.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have asked the question for the reason that I have an appointment within an hour that needs my attention, and as I am next in order it would be more convenient for me to speak now than at a future time.

Mr. CASSIDY. I will finish in a few minutes if the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

As I have shown you, the immigration is not free and voluntary. They come as slaves. Their passage is paid by their masters—always one of the Six Chinese Companies of San Francisco. They come in herds and droves. They live and move and have their being in the same way. They bring with them leprosy and disease. They bring the deadly opium habit. They bring vice, not virtue. They bring crime and pestilence. They bring slavery, not freedom. They bring a civilization which has not taken a step forward in fifty centuries of time. They bring demoralization for our youth and starvation for our laboring classes. They have made Kearneyism and the Sand Lot possible in San Francisco. They have, in short, brought disorder and strife and unwholesome excitement among us, which evils have operated to date back for at least fifty years the full development and growth and beauty of the fairest section on the broad face of the earth's surface.

These are the people and these are the evils which we seek by this bill to rid ourselves and our posterity of. These are the people which you have all said in your platforms must be turned back. Speaking for this side of the House, the Democratic party stands ready almost to a man, I believe, to redeem its pledge to the country. How is it with our Republican friends who were so sensitive about the Morey letter when the votes of the Pacific States were needed? Let the roll-call answer.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR.]

Mr. TAYLOR rose.

Mr. PAGE. I am requested by gentlemen who are leaving the Hall to request that all members who desire may be permitted to print in the RECORD remarks upon this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the order requested by the gentleman from California will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. May I inquire of the gentleman from California whether he proposes to bring this matter to a vote to-day?

Mr. PAGE. I do not intend to call the previous question to-day. But if we should be successful in getting up the bill to-morrow by antagonizing private business, I will call the previous question to-morrow at three o'clock. If we do not consider this bill to-morrow I have thought that on Saturday at three o'clock I should call the previous question on the bill, allowing the debate to run till that time. I hope that will be satisfactory to all.

Mr. TAYLOR. When this bill came first under my consideration I was in that condition of mind that caused me to inquire somewhat carefully concerning its merits. I think I have now approached the time when my judgment is substantially matured on this question; and I desire to-day to give some reasons why I shall oppose and vote against it.

I am well aware that this bill will pass this House and will become a law. I am not oblivious to the sentiment of this House on that question, and I think I am as well aware that the popular voice of this nation to-day, so far as it has been expressed, is in favor of the passage of this bill. But that fact cannot control my judgment. I thought when I took a seat in this House that it would be quite likely that I should seldom feel called upon to speak except on that side of a question that was regarded here and possibly elsewhere with more or less disfavor. Those measures that are popular will have plenty of support from men rushing to their defense; and I supposed it would be quite likely that if I spoke at all, which would be very infrequently, it would be on the side of a measure that was not favored by strong public opinion. I find myself in that situation now, as I believe, but still I desired the opportunity which I now have to express my views in regard to this bill.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this bill violates the treaty existing between the United States and China, in spirit and in fact. But my objection to it is not there. The terms of this bill are severe and, in my judgment, cruel; but my objection does not lie there. If this bill is to become a law, I desire it should be more obnoxious to those objections even, than it now is, that it might be sooner remedied by the people when they stop and think.

My objections to the bill are many. The first one that presses upon my mind as a very serious one is that it is brought upon us and forced upon our consideration by the passion and prejudice of a portion of this people, and that kind of a prejudice which is the most difficult to remove, and the most dangerous in its character, of any that ever did or ever can take possession of the human heart—I mean race prejudice. And I recognize, Mr. Speaker, in this discussion the same elements of argument that I first met forty-five years ago, when another subject was under consideration, and when I was but a lad not yet in my teens.

We are told that this nation of Chinamen is vicious beyond description. I have no idea that that nation occupies a very high position morally. I know but little about it, although perhaps as much, notwithstanding the statements of gentlemen on this floor, as those who have already spoken. How much of those statements come to us and to what extent they are increased in volume and added to through this medium of prejudice I am not aware, but I deprecate any legislation under such a demand. They tell us that we must pass this bill to relieve a locality, a part of this Union. Some of the gentlemen argue that it affects their part of the country alone. Others argue that it affects all the people of this country. In my judgment the material part of this question affects Ohio as much as California, and I deny that California may demand of Ohio to assist in passing this bill as being only for the interest of California.

But again we are told that political parties, through their national conventions as their organs, have proclaimed already that this bill or something like it ought to pass. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] went further than that. He told us that we on this side were bound in honor as members of this House to vote for this bill, because a convention of Republicans had declared generally in favor of such a proposition. Here in this House I am only responsible for my acts to my own conscience, my country, and my God. No party organization outside of this House, past or contemporaneous, can control or affect that vote, or put me in such a position that anybody can say that I am dishonored in my vote against this bill. If the gentleman did not mean that it would have been quite as well if he had not said what he did.

Why, then, do I oppose this bill? The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. CASSIDY] says he has heard but one or two reasons given in opposition to this bill. Let me tell this House why I oppose it. It is simply because it is unnecessary, and being unnecessary it is dangerous, unspeakably dangerous.

I do not deny the truth of that saying that is peddled to us from House to House, I mean the two Houses of this Congress, that if a man does not provide for his own household he is worse than an infidel, and that the same principle is applicable to States. That is all well enough.

But I say this in regard to the question before us. It is not prejudice that is to be consulted; it is not a matter of convenience that is to be consulted that should lead us to shut our doors and build a Chinese wall around this nation, or part way around it. And when you begin the foundation of that wall and build a section of it, God himself only knows when the building will stop.

I say it is not a matter of convenience only. We must not consult simply our notions as to whether we are better than these people, or whether the presence of this man is objectionable to our finer sense of refinement.

Such a bill as this is justifiable only—and I take it the bill means simply the prohibition of importation of laborers from China—in a case of necessity, upon the ground of self-defense. That is a broad ground upon which we may stand, just as homicide is defensible. Self-defense puts the actor in a homicide in a safe position. But he must not kill his neighbor because he thinks he is better than his neighbor. Yea, parricide is justifiable, and a son may slay his father and be justified by the law; but he may do so only in self-defense, not to distribute his estate. But you come here in the latter position; you are undertaking to pass this bill, as I think, for the purpose of bettering yourselves, either in purse or in feeling.

Now, to the question: Is it necessary that this bill should pass? Have any facts been told us that make it necessary, in order to protect our country in any important essential particular, that this bill should be passed? Has anybody told us that it is necessary, in order to preserve any essential interest of our people, that this bill be passed?

They have told us that the Chinaman is diseased. Then keep out the disease. They have told us that he did not have such religion as ours. Are you afraid of such a matter as that? Is it necessary in order to protect the religion of the last two thousand years that a remnant, a handful of paganism in California should be exterminated or more prevented from coming?

Once the belief was that the command was alive to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Now they tell us that in California the ministers of the gospel and the churches of Jesus Christ ask that these heathen be sent away from the influence of those churches. What a comment upon the religion of the nineteenth century!

There was a time when the cross conquered. There was a time when the religion of the cross broke the hammer of the northern Thor, and seized the thunderbolt from the hand of Olympian Jove; but to-day it cowers and shrinks and begs to be helped in the shadow of a Chinese joss-house in California, surrounded by lepers such as our Saviour cured.

If that be so I recommend a reorganization of the Christian churches of California. Let my friend from California instruct them in the principles of the Sermon on the Mount and the Decalogue, and read to them something from the Book of Martyrs, that they may regain their courage and their confidence.

Oh, what a pretense! I do not know but partly true so far as California is concerned, but I think not, and I will tell this House after a while why I think not. But it is true, so far as my ear can determine, that in all this controversy but a single voice has been raised in behalf of these, God's poor; but a single voice upon the ground of Christianity have I heard in favor of these poor people, and that was from a Catholic lay brother. Oh, yes; an unknown, to me, woman has ventured to raise her voice and beg us to learn something more than what mere prejudice teaches us before we pass this bill.

If paganism is not coming in through the door of the Golden Gate to take possession of the religion of the nineteenth century, if that is only something thrown out by way of excuse for this bill, what other reason exists for it?

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] stood here the other day and made a speech. I have read that speech. He is an able gentleman, a conscientious man. But I wondered marvelously at that speech. I wondered what it meant; I wondered what he meant when he made this speech. Let us look at it.

I got the impression, and it has not been removed by reading his spee h, that these people who go into California, these laborers who are to be kept away, these coolies, were almost a mass of leprous humanity. We had the evidence of the famous Mr. King, or Mr. Pixley, or somebody else, that their ankles rotted off, their flesh dropped from their bones.

Now, these people are in California for what purpose? Not only to take possession of our religion but also by the strong hand to destroy our civilization. Prostrated by a disease that is inbred in the Chinaman, gotten there by their close corporation at home, with their blood flowing through their veins in poisoned streams, they are still so energetic and so persistent and such eternal laborers that by the hand of labor alone they are to take possession of this country. Mr. Speaker, both of these statements cannot be true.

Mr. PAGE. I know the gentleman from Ohio does not wish to misrepresent the sentiments expressed here by any friend of this bill. He misunderstands our position if he supposes we have any apprehension that the Chinese will take possession of this country. But their labor is being brought into competition with the labor of our citizens; and these Chinese are not people from whom the United States Government wishes to build up a great country. But we are not afraid of their coming here on the ground that they may take possession of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very well; then any misunderstanding of the meaning of the gentleman or some gentlemen here on that point is dissipated. What else? If they were actually so bad as the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana would imply, then as laborers they would not compete much with the labor of our own citizens. But, sir, that is simply one of the exaggerations growing out of race prejudice in connection with this question. Such exaggerations always connect themselves with any controversy growing out of race prejudice. I remember, Mr. Speaker, hearing once a discussion between intelligent gentlemen as to whether a colored man has a soul; and upon that question depended the success of the Democratic or the Whig party! I have lived to see a colored man in the Senate of the United States; I have seen a colored man lead the procession to the inauguration of a President of the United States. I remember that the whole discussion of those olden times as to whether slavery was right or wrong turned upon the question whether the negroes were an inferior race—as though, in the name of God's justice, inferiority of race was an excuse for oppression in law!

In what other way are these Chinamen going to injure us? It is said that they are vile, loathsome, filthy. Mr. Speaker, I know not how much truth there is in this statement. I do know that in San Francisco they live in Chinatown—huddled together, to be sure—where there are little or no sewer privileges, little water privileges, though they are taxed for policing and cleaning the city. Water costs them more than flour; they have to buy it and transport it for use. The city authorities never carry away the refuse of their part of the city, but I venture to say that in my belief, considering their circumstances, they are more cleanly in their personal habits than any equal number of laboring people in the country.

But it is said they are vicious—guilty of unnamed vice. Mr. Speaker, I have tried law suits for thirty-five years and more; and I have frequently observed that a case generally presents two phases—one the outward and apparent, the other the real one. Now this view of the case that they are eaten up, totally diseased, body and soul, with vice is the outward and apparent view of this case. What is probably the real fact? How do we get at it? We learn concerning them that they are industrious as no other people are; they are frugal (and that is the complaint) as no other people are. They work early and late; they work always. If they cannot get the highest price in the market for their labor they still work at the next. Now, can any man, can any race of men, steeped and eaten up in vice and degradation, present that aspect of civilization? I assert in opposition to this statement that it must be a mistake and a misrepresentation, or God has dealt differently with that people than with any other that He ever made.

It is said further, that they come here not like other people, to stay and become naturalized. Is the gentleman from California sure that this is the truth? Would he like to have us strike out that part of this bill which prohibits naturalization of the Chinese? [Mr. PAGE rose.] It is not absolutely necessary for the gentleman to answer now, because, as I understand, he has already answered the question.

Mr. PAGE. The bill as prepared in the House did not have that provision.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are you willing that it should be struck out?

Mr. PAGE. So far as I am concerned it would make no difference, as I know and the gentleman knows that under the law they cannot be naturalized, because they are not white persons or persons of African nativity or descent.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why can they not be naturalized?

Mr. PAGE. Because the naturalization laws prevent it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why, then, should not the law be changed before you complain that they will not assimilate? You throw this obstacle in the way of their assimilation and then complain that they do assimilate!

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. TAYLOR. Not many moments, because I am pressed for time.

Mr. PAGE. I will not encroach upon the gentleman's time unduly. The Burlingame treaty contains express provisions that nothing in the treaty shall be construed as conferring the right of naturalization upon Chinese subjects in the United States, or citizens of the United States in China.

Mr. TAYLOR. What difference does that make? Would you wish to make a treaty allowing them to be naturalized? If for any reason they cannot be naturalized, it is not fair to say that they will not be?

Mr. PAGE. You cannot naturalize them by treaty.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman does not begin to get my idea; he takes no part of it. I say that if any treaty, any law, prevents these people absolutely from becoming naturalized, you must not charge against them the want of intention to become citizens.

Mr. PAGE. We promised in a former treaty to pass laws to prevent their naturalization.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman does not understand me. Is there anybody else in this House that does not understand what I mean? They do not assimilate! Here they have been for thirty years, ever since they commenced coming to this country. Have they ever been invited to assimilate? Have they been treated in California at any time as if they ever could assimilate? For thirty years in the life-time of a nation they have been there and the ban has been upon them. Thirty years in the life of the Chinese nation, surrounded with the wall that it is proposed now to erect around the United States—and set up at the Golden Gate a nation that has existed thousands of years—and because they have not become acquainted with our language and race, or because they have not changed from paganism to Christianity, and from heathenism to civilization, when they were laboring under all the disadvantages that have been imposed upon them by onerous restrictions and hostilities, we are told that they do not "assimilate."

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR. I must decline to be interrupted.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask a very brief question.

Mr. TAYLOR. A child may ask a question which a wise man cannot answer, and a short question may lead to a lengthy reply.

Mr. BAYNE. I only wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he is in favor of conferring equal privileges upon the Chinese, and if he believes that the conferring of the right to vote upon the Chinaman would lead to his assimilation?

Mr. TAYLOR. What if it did, or not?

A MEMBER. Suppose you confer equal privileges and see what the effect would be.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, when I come to that portion of my argument, which is perhaps more appropriate to the discussion of the question, put than any other, I shall take the position that it is not for assimilation or the interests of the Asiatics that I speak, but the interests and welfare of our own people at home and those who come from the other nations of the earth and people our Eastern and Middle States.

Mr. BRIGGS. I wish to ask the gentleman, if the Chinese had the ballot, if he thinks this bill would pass?

Mr. TAYLOR. If a hundred thousand Chinese had the ballot in California I know some men who would not give a single vote in passing a bill of this character.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is it.

Mr. BAYNE. That is a very fair explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR. But, Mr. Speaker, I must request that I may be permitted to continue my remarks without interruption.

Now, what else is there besides the want of good religion alleged against them? And it is wonderful they do not have better and more of it from the example they have seen in California; and the matter of their lack of assimilation, demanding of this people that in a day, in a moment, their nature shall be changed. I say what else is there against them? It is alleged that they are vile and vicious; what else? Only one other thing that I remember, and if I mistake any in this list please call my attention to it, for I want it to be complete. What is the next charge? That they come in competition with labor and injure the laborers of the United States. No gentleman has told me how that was done. I have not heard it explained on this floor. No philosopher can tell how this can be done. And, Mr. Speaker, let no other man speak to this House without giving us some philosophic reason for this statement. It is a cheap statement and easily made, and gentlemen may think that these people at home who labor will be taken with the catchwords; but the time will come when they will wish a mountain was upon them when they voted for this bill.

Speak of degraded labor! The gentleman from Nevada tells us of "degraded labor." I know of no such terms, I know nothing of any such thing. I know that laborers may be degraded by law, and by wrong, and by prejudice, but the labor which they do is as noble, is as honorable, as labor performed by any. And why not? In what way does this interfere with us? Does it interfere with our labor because the Chinaman who comes here is not skilled or is only a day laborer?

One hundred thousand are here, not many more. Three thousand come in two months, and as many return. For twenty years there has been no considerable increase, if any, in the aggregate. They are substantially in California; they have built railroads when no other labor could be obtained; they have reclaimed thousands and tens of thousands of acres of land that no other labor could or would reclaim; they have done all manner of work; they occupy at this hour that position in California. Do they interfere with other laborers? Never. Not at all. What California wants now is 8,000,000 more laborers. There is more than work enough for 8,000,000 of laboring men to-day in the soil of California. Seventeen millions of people can be supported within that mighty empire; and though there are 100,000 Chinese there, there is labor enough for them to do without interfering with others.

Cheap labor! There is no cheap labor in California. Chinese labor is not cheap. If a Chinaman knows anything he knows how to drive a bargain, and his interest is to get as high wages as he can possibly receive. But he will do this, I admit, and if it be wrong let him bear the burden of it, he will work and work cheap rather than starve.

My own district—and in that respect I am not unlike other gentlemen here, some of whom I see are sympathizing with this bill—my district is full of men that work in the mines and that work in the mills. Do I suppose that these Chinese in California interfere with their labor? Go and ask them what they think of my wish in that regard. Protect labor by tariff against the foreign laborer? That is right. Protect labor in this country by a tariff against the laborer who is here? That is not my tariff. That is discrimination; that is inequality; that is injustice. If you are going to protect the laborers of this country that are here already from laborers that are to come in, then let your law still be equal and aimed at every one alike. And why not?

Mr. CALKINS. Because the others assimilate.

Mr. TAYLOR. Assimilate! What is the difference when we talk about labor? We do not want you to marry any Chinese person. There is no compulsion about that. We are talking about labor. Have you a right to kick me because I will not assimilate with you?

But I pass that question of assimilation. I am talking now of nothing but labor. I want to know now if you can protect one class of laborers upon any principle of exclusion of other laborers. Are you doing it when you keep them away? But you say: "Oh, that is very different, because the other people are white men." That is, if you go clear to the bottom, "because the other people's friends have ballots." When you go there you strike the bottom rock, although it might not be popular to say that.

How is it that this labor is injuring anybody? The truth is, as I apprehend, that these men come here not to stay. I do not suppose that they intend to assimilate, that they intend to make this their home. I am inclined to think that the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] was correct, when he said that if they did desire to become naturalized it was for the purpose of carrying on their business more safely. I am inclined to think and am informed and understand the fact to be that these men are selected from the families to which they belong—and they are lovers of families in China—one of a family is selected to come here and earn something and carry it back and better himself and his family. Now if he does that, is he doing this country any harm? He comes here and sells his labor which is worth twice as much as he gets for it. His work on the railroad or on the reclaimed lands, his work in the shops and his work in the houses is worth more than his pay. Has he cheated the country? He goes away and takes with him what he has not spent. He carries that away with him. Has he wronged anybody? Has he not left an equivalent of that which he carries with him? Is it not his right to do it even under our skies?

Mr. Speaker, I do not know about the philosophical question lying away under this matter. There are many things I have read about upon which I have not full convictions. I do not know how much of the unoccupied portion of the earth God's creatures may occupy rightly. I do not know upon how much of the waters of His globe they may sail in their own right. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, how much of the air surrounding this globe each one of the creatures of the Almighty may breathe in his own right and rightfully. But it does seem to me that if there is a sacred right existing anywhere it is that a man may labor for his bread, and that he may go where labor is and get it. When the Almighty turned our first parents out of the garden he not only made it a burden but gave it as a right for them to labor everywhere. And I tell you in spite of treaties, in spite of laws, in spite of public opinion, you are doing an overpowering wrong when you say these people shall not labor.

Mr. Speaker, labor does not compete with labor injuriously in this country; nor will it do so for a hundred years or a thousand years to come. One laborer makes labor for others.

But I am precipitating that part of my remarks. I wish to say one thing more upon the distinction that is made between this class of people and the other classes. They say these people spend less money; other classes of people do us good when they come because they spend their money. Mr. Speaker, is it the man who spends his money that is advantageous as an immigrant in this country? Is that the test? The man that works and gets large wages and spends those wages in riotous living, is he the good citizen of the country? Is he the man that brings us value? I rather say the man that comes to this country and earns and keeps his money and sends it to his old mother or to keep his sisters out of the poor-house does right, and we have no right as economists to complain. He has paid for that money; the product of his labor is with us, and he is not injuring our people. And just so exactly in a material sense do I say it is with the Chinaman. When he brings his labor here he brings that which benefits and enriches the country.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I intended to be and I think I am opposed to it in a moderate way. I do not intend to be extravagant in my opposition to it. But I would rather like to have it reasonably well understood that I am opposed to the bill. And I will state another reason why I am opposed to it, or rather another reason in this line.

I have already said that this bill ought not to become a law unless it becomes a matter of necessity, not simply a mere matter of choice or convenience. And why? We talk in regard to the difference between races; and I am astonished at the way we talk. I know our books speak of it learnedly. There are heaps of nonsense in some books. We talk about—or did a few years ago—the national enmities of the Latin and German races. And yet every well informed man knew that France is as much German as Germany in origin, that originally the first settlers that history speaks of came out of the woods of Germany into France—the Celts, and they were followed by still another body of people—the Franks, and they were followed by still another—the Goths—all the founders of France of which history speaks being out of Germany except the Scandinavians, who came down and made the Norman part of France and subsequently invaded England.

And where did they come from? You men who know all about races and can tell God's way of ordering things and what He thinks and knows, those of you who think that when you see what has been done in a moment you can reason what has been in the eternity past and what will be in the eternity to come—you men, who can do all these things, tell me where did those men come from who made France, yea, Italy and Germany, like one family, and Spain as well. Where did they come from? They came from Asia, from Scythia. Where is Scythia? History does not tell you. They came from within the walls of China probably. And we have now met. Some of us came from the east, and we have met those coming to the east. And you who say that you know of what the different families of the earth are made, and whether they will assimilate or not, tell me what their true history is or what it will be.

As to this matter of interest, how is it affected by these men being here? How can they come in competition with us on this side of the mountains? How can they come in competition with you on the other side of the mountains? Before they came your work was done? There is now five times the amount of remunerative work ready at your hands that your laborers in California can do. I take some little comfort to myself in thinking of your perplexities should this bill pass. The Moors who went out of Spain went amid the flaunting of banners and the sounding of trumpets, but they left it a desert, and it has not been clothed since. This bill is not necessary; it is absolutely unnecessary. And I will now demonstrate it to you so that there ought to be no further discussion about this matter. You tell me that every man, every woman, every Christian in California says—let the Chinese go. Who says let them come? Not one. No more voices are heard for that than came from Logan's dead family when he called for them to respond. No one wants them there. Why do you want a law to keep them from coming? They cannot come unless you of California welcome them. In your hands is the power, and in a moment you can not only free California from the incoming tide, but you can set in a reflux of that tide. Absolutely there is no necessity for this law, that changes and revolutionizes our Government. There is no excuse for this law. We are told that California with one voice cries out against the further advance of the heathens. Yet California only can allow the heathens to advance. If you tell us the truth, and you do doubtless, then why do you come to Congress for aid?

The point lies here: either there is some reason why this united voice of California cries out, or it is not a voluntary acclaim, or else there is a misapprehension as to what she says.

I can understand how some men in the city of San Francisco, as in any other, may get up a prejudice. A class everywhere existing easily take on prejudice against those that they hope are still lower. A man, no matter how low he is, wishes to kick some dog that is lower still. They may get up this prejudice, and in local contests it tells. Finally it grows stronger. A ship comes in loaded with these coolies. They are unloaded on the wharf and get into their carts. Half-grown wild boys on the wharf and in the streets throw mud and stones at them, and load them with abuse which I will not describe. Finally a warfare exists between the two races. And that is to be deplored.

One gentleman who has addressed the House says that there will be these conflicts as long as this people come in. It is a conflict between the wolf and the lamb; it always was so in this wicked world. The lamb is the one who is to suffer, not the wolf. The wolf does not beg that his shall do better. He does not say cease and desist. But he wants the lamb to be punished, to be slaughtered, that there may be no warfare between the wolf and the lamb. The warfare increases and finally they say—and mind you, they have votes in their hands—they say, you merchants who employ the Chinese, we will not trade with you; you lawyers who defend the Chinese, we will not employ you; you preachers who recognize the souls of the Chinese, we will not patronize you. And there is terrorism, increasing terrorism, until the voice seems to be unanimous. This may not be so. If it is not so, and if on the other hand the voice is earnest, then you need no law.

But you say men will hire that labor which is cheapest, that labor which is a penny or a dollar less than other labor; you say that while we have in our midst moral loathsomeness, physical disease, and leprosy that runs through the whole community of Chinese, because we can get their work cheaper we will employ them. We will send the clothes that we have upon our bodies to the Chinese leper to be cleansed by his leprous hands. We will have the Chinese servants in our rooms and about our houses taking care of our children because we can get that labor cheaper.

Mr. Speaker and members of this House, there is something wrong in this argument; there is something wrong underlying this bill. The facts are not as the words are, or else the result will be different from what is feared. If you only hate the Chinese in California to the amount of a shilling a head, this Congress is not called upon to act.

Mr. Speaker, in this city men, women, and children have gone from the auction block under the Stars and Stripes of this Government; under the same cry that we hear to-day as against the Chinese they have been sold within the sound of my voice under the hammer. The defense was that they were an inferior race—the only defense that ever could be given. The old slogan is heard again now. I meet it as I met it then. I meet it as the people in my little corner of the State of Ohio met it. I meet it by saying that inequality of condition or capacity is no excuse for inequality before the law. Before the law of this country all nations of the earth are equal when their individual members arrive upon our shores; before the law the citizens of our country are equal so long as they are under the protection of our flag.

Mr. PAGE. Before the gentleman takes his seat——

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no idea of taking my seat yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. Will he let me ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR. Certainly I will.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman has stated that there is no excuse for the passage of this bill. Does he believe that the voice of the people of three States of this Union, embracing in population over a million, who have unanimously petitioned this House and the other branch of the Federal Legislature in favor of this bill, ought to have any hearing on the floor of the House? Does he think that we should give no thought or consideration to their petition?

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, there can be no misunderstanding as to my position on that matter.

Mr. PAGE. There is no misunderstanding as to theirs.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say that their request should be examined, and if reasonable and proper conceded.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask one more question.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not half through answering the last.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman can answer both at the same time; for I dislike to interrupt him as much as he dislikes to be interrupted. The gentleman has said that there is no excuse or reason for the passage of any bill of this kind. At the same time he has conceded that the voice of a million of people, coming unanimously to Congress from three States of this Union, should have some consideration. I ask him what consideration he would allow to the sentiment of those States, and what remedy he proposes for the evil under which they suffer?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have said that in this House, so long as I may be a member of it, I propose to act on my own judgment as to what is proper and wise. I would consider petitions of that kind coming from the Pacific coast as I would consider the request of any other petitioners, and I would grant or refuse the request as I thought wise. I do not understand that any locality simply on account of its interest or desire can ask us to pass a law which affects all localities.

But this is what I wish to make emphatic: I do not mean to say that the people in California and the other Pacific States are not anxious to get rid of this pest as they esteem it, I wish they might do so; but I say there is no occasion to ask Congress to legislate in that direction, because they can apply the remedy themselves without any law of Congress. They need simply let the Chinese alone, and it is done. If they are vile lepers, let the people of the Pacific States not employ them. The difference between that way and this, I am now going to speak of.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I would like to ask the gentleman one question? Would not the same argument apply to the liquor traffic and other things that we have to repress?

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh! I am not certain that I understand the liquor traffic. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I have but little time and I must draw my remarks to a close. I have spoken unpremeditatedly, without knowing what I was going to say in form or substance. I come now to the main thought in this whole discussion. We have been told in every speech in favor of this bill at the other end of the Capitol and at this end of the Capitol, that in this case we must "throw sentiment aside." "Throw sentiment aside!" Others may "throw sentiment aside," but the Republican party is founded on sentiment, and it cannot "throw sentiment aside." A party that could find it equally easy to vote for Tilden or Greeley may possibly "throw sentiment aside," but a party born out of the anti-slavery sentiment, born out of the principle of liberty, cannot disregard sentiment. What is sentiment? Is it something to be thrown aside? It is that which results from the intellectual and moral faculties pervading and becoming more a part of a man than any other of his belongings. Throw sentiment aside! Sentiment is thought as well as feeling. Sentiment is reflective opinion guided by conscience and by the moral perceptions. Throw sentiment aside! What is our reverence for justice? It is a sentiment. What is our love for mercy? It is a sentiment, the head and the heart approving both. What is patriotism? A sentiment growing out of intellectual appreciation and moral feeling. In order to vote for this bill we must throw aside our sentiment; we must throw aside the sentiment of justice, we must throw aside the sentiment of mercy, you must throw aside the sentiment of patriotism, and I cannot, and I cannot make the triune sacrifice in favor of this bill.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question now?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I hope, before that, by unanimous consent, the time of the gentleman from Ohio will be extended, so as to enable him to complete his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he regards the sixth plank in the Republican platform of 1880 as a mere sentiment, that plank wherein it says that—

> Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with Congress, or with the United States and its treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese as an evil of great magnitude, invokes the exercise of those powers to restrain and limit that immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable provisions as will produce that result.

Answer that. Is that a sentiment, or will the gentleman admit that that was a mere catch-trap? What I want to ask the gentleman is, was that put into the platform of the Republican party so as to catch the votes of the three Pacific States; or was it put in with the intention to execute it and carry it out in good faith, in the interest of the people of the whole country?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have once answered the question of the gentleman——

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman can have all the time he wants so far as I am concerned, but let him answer that specific question. I wish the gentleman to give a specific answer to this House, and let it go upon record, if there is a Republican who can stand upon this floor of the American Congress and say that that plank in that platform was a sentiment merely, and was never intended to be executed or made operative?

Mr. REED, (from his seat.) Sentiments are intended to be executed.

Mr. PAGE. But if this is a sentiment, then execute the sentiment.

Mr. REED. The bill does not do that.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be permitted to continue my remarks.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will be allowed ample time to answer the question.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is nobody interfering with my answering the question. I say in regard to that that my position was stated in the beginning. I have no doubt that was a principle put seriously and honestly into the platform for the purpose of controlling the action of the Republican party. I have no doubt about that. I am not prepared to say that it was a sentiment within the distinction of what I have been saying in that connection. And I say again that I have no objection to any one supporting that principle or sentiment if he believes it to be embodied in this bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say again that this bill, in my judgment, does not provide, according to that principle, what is contemplated in the platform of the Republican party. But I make no objection there.

Now, I wish to say in regard to this, that the reason I object to the bill chiefly and finally is because it changes essentially our condition as a nation. It changes our condition before the world. It is taking upon us an exclusiveness that has not belonged to us in the past; and for one I am not willing to do that. But, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say, in justice to myself, I hope my remarks have not been understood as favoring a further immigration of the Chinese. I deplore their presence here as much as any man. I have not been addressing myself to that branch of the subject. I want no more of them. But I talk only of this bill, and I do not mean to be in the least understood as favoring that immigration.

Now, what do I mean by the last proposition I have made? This is a bill that changes and revolutionizes the traditions and principles of this country. I am not a mere Jefferson Brick. I do not relish unreasonable glorification of our country, but I was early taught love of country. I loved our country right or wrong, but better right. Its traditions were and are dear to me. I have never ceased to love it all, and all its people. To me, if it is a sentiment merely, it is a sentiment I cannot give up. I cannot give up that sentiment, and every sentiment in my nature is opposed to this bill. What is it? Right here in this country the people of all the earth may come, not a part of the people of a part of the earth, but any or all who wish to come may do so. They may come freely and are welcome to our shores.

I have looked upon immigration from the older countries as that which has exerted so wonderful an influence upon our civilization and that has brought us thrift and prosperity. I never was sorry whenever a mechanic or laborer landed upon our shores. I do not ask him when he lands at Castle Garden what he intends to charge for his labor, and if the amount is small send him home, and if the amount is large keep him among us. I do not stop and look at him to see if he is clean in his habits, or ask what he brought with him, or whether he is a man who brings with him wealth, or if he is a child of toil. I know in his right arm and in his muscle there are riches not found in Nevada, that cannot be dug out of the sands of California. I always desire to see him coming and to welcome him, and I glory when I meet him. I glory over this fact in our history.

But what do they propose? They propose to build a wall across the Golden Gate; they propose to exclude the oldest of the families of the earth; and I say to this House, I say to this country, that we know not when the next wall will be erected, nor where its foundations will be laid. I know of members of this House that will vote for this bill because they want further restrictions on the eastern side of the continent, and I sound the alarm to our foreign-born citizens that this bill, whether meant for them or not, strikes at them and their security. It is the first break in the levee; when the waters stream over it the crevasse will follow as the levee gives way. This is no imaginary thought of mine. Principles will always work out, and this is the principle you are adopting in this bill. In principle we can no more close this gate against honest laborers unless there is a cause why laborers should be kept out than we can close the eastern gate against honest laborers without cause why they should be kept out. It revolutionizes our traditions. I would deem the new country we will have after this bill becomes law as changed from the old country we have to-day as our country would have been changed if the rebellion of 1861 had succeeded.

It is not a physical and material change, but it is a moral and legal change. The way that we have been traveling, the road that we have been making, has been straight and in one direction. If that way is encumbered and our feet led from it, where shall we be brought up? Where will it end? Who lives that can tell? Those of you that remember the years of 1854 and 1855 need not be told what prejudice may do when craftily excited. Good citizens then traveled the streets nights lest the Catholic hired girl should poison the wells. Their remedy was the exclusion of a foreign, non-assimilating religion. "Put none but Americans on guard to-night" was the cry that went up; and war almost commenced between races then upon the ground of non-assimilation. You are sowing the wind and you may reap the whirlwind, or the ways of God are changeable, as we have been told they are not. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] is recognized.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of the pending bill I think it quite proper that we should take it up and consider it in its practical bearings upon the people of this country and with reference to the past history of this question. It occurs to my mind in examining the debates in the other end of the Capitol and in this that the discussion has been too comprehensive in its scope. I ask, sir, if there is any party in this country in favor of naturalizing Chinamen, in favor of granting to Chinamen the benefit of our homestead and pre-emption laws? Is there any party in this country in favor of unrestricted Chinese immigration? And, sir, if every political party has taken position against these three propositions, which is shown by our laws, treaties, and party platforms, then we have a much simpler task to perform than has occurred to other gentlemen in the discussion of this question who have been laboriously expounding and eulogizing the Declaration of Independence.

In 1876 the people of the Pacific coast were agitated upon this very subject, so much so that the Congress of the United States sent a commission there, headed by the distinguished Senator from Indiana, Mr. Morton, for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of affairs. That commission had before it the counsel of the people, the counsel of the Six Companies, and the counsel of railway corporations. It was not strange, sir, that in this volume which contains the results of that investigation there should have been contradictions; it was not strange that the ingenuity of counsel should make false issues; it was not strange that they found witnesses not in sympathy with the masses of the people.

I am gratified to find that last Saturday week the people of the Pacific coast, seeing that their own views had been misrepresented by counsel and by witnesses in 1876, undertook in the most solemn form in which the people of the Pacific coast could do so to speak to the American people by a resort to the ballot; and that with an unanimity unparalleled their voices come to the American Congress upon this question with irresistible assurance as to their sentiments upon it.

What are they asking, Mr. Speaker? They are asking what the people of this country in their organized capacity as parties have pledged to them. The Democratic party in 1880, knowing the intensity with which the people on that coast felt on this question, in the most succinct, unmistakable, unerring language pronounced their views as follows:

> No more Chinese immigration, except for travel, education, and foreign commerce, and therein carefully guarded.

The Democratic platform goes even beyond regulating it. But, sir, the Republican party at that time adopted the following language:

> Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with Congress, or with the United States in its treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese—> as an evil of great magnitude, invokes the exercise of these powers to restrain and limit the immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable provisions as will produce that result.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have first the Burlingame treaty, in which we expressly inhibit the idea of their becoming naturalized. The right to regulate their coming here is expressly declared in the Republican platform, and in more distinct terms in the Democratic platform. Then, sir, what is the status of the Chinese who come here? Of what class of people is it that complaint is made? Why, sir, the evidence in this volume, the evidence of Senators and Representatives from that section tells us, first, that it is the poorest of the Chinese population that come here. They come from poverty and oppression to our country. They come not to become citizens of this land. They come not to identify themselves with our institutions. They come with their peculiar habits of living; for instance, living upon rice, and a hundred in a room, which you are told a decent family of employés of the humblest character would require for its own use. They drive the labor of our people on that coast from the various avenues of profit. There are now 75,000 of them in California, representing one-third of the male adult population in that State. By our last reports we are informed that one-third of the adult male population of that State are Chinese.

Now, is it possible that we propose to permit that class of people from Asia to come into that country and drive out our own people, to drive out the natives who have gone into that section, and the naturalized foreigners who have gone there with their families, who are identified with the community, paying taxes, liable to military duty, and in fact completely homogeneous with that people? Is it possible that we intend to permit an accumulation of people on that coast who, as seen in the operations there daily, must inevitably drive our own laborers from that section?

More than that; we are told in this very volume that, in order to enforce in this country the contracts made in China, by their local legislation when a Chinaman fails to execute in this country that contract their authorities will seize his father, his brother, his mother, or his sister, to compel its execution by them. More than that; the crime of theft committed by one member of a family, if he escapes, is punished in the person of some other member of the family.

The Government of China has permitted, has sanctioned arrangements to be made for the transportation of their cooly laborers into this and other countries for terms of years. And such contracts are enforced by seizing, if need be, other members of the laborer's family and compelling them to labor or by selling them. What is this but slavery even in our land? Will you tell me that a Chinaman who is bound through his own family by such obligations as these, by means of the enslaving of his own father or own brother, will be able to secure justice to himself under such a contract?

There stands the letter of his contract, and he must by every sentiment of his humanity execute it unquestioningly, execute it under the lash of a most terrible discipline. And do you wonder that men rise on this floor and say that the Chinese labor is the best labor in the world? I am not surprised that it is more efficient, that it can be driven every hour of the day from dawn till twilight, that it will adapt itself to any conditions of life.

I have been somewhat surprised, upon looking at these facts, that the Burlingame treaty ever found a place in our relations with China. With this sort of population that I have described, with this local legislation, with this utter degradation and denial of the rights of these people under contracts enforced by Chinese laws, why should the representatives of America have met the Emperor of China and agreed that in consideration of certain commercial privileges the exclusive people of that country should be allowed to come without limit to America, while Americans were not to be allowed to go into that country except under certain conditions and only into certain portions of it? What could have been the inducements offered by that exclusive people to lead our representatives to place in a treaty such provisions in relation to immigration from China? Was it because that government felt that its population was overcrowded and that they would find a safety-valve in this direction? Was it because the dominant classes of that country, dealing with the capitalists of other lands, felt that not only in Peru and in the Spanish provinces but also in America they could find a remuneration by dealing in the poorer classes of their countrymen? Was that the object of the free immigration of Chinese in the treaty? I can see no other.

They distinctly provided and we covenanted that when they came here they should form no part of our own people, they should enjoy no rights of citizenship here. Why consign these multitudes to the American shores under the most solemn form of treaty, and provide that they should not have citizenship and the protection to be derived from citizenship in American lands?

Mr. ATKINS. In that connection will the gentleman allow me to ask him to state his opinion of the effect of a dense Chinese population thrown on our shores in a military point of view? Will it not be very dangerous to our liberty?

Mr. BLOUNT. Undoubtedly. I will take great pleasure in answering the gentleman a little further on. Were our people so eager for commerce, were the manufacturing and commercial interests of this country so importunate, that they would agree to a treaty to bring this people here under such conditions? If so, it does not lie within their mouths to talk about sentiment and humanity.

We have had another treaty with China on this subject, made in 1881. And, very singular to say, with all the agitation on the Pacific coast, with all the depth of feeling with which America has voiced her sentiment on this subject, it was not even understood by the Chinese authorities when the movement was started that we objected to any immigration of laborers. The only hint of change in our treaty relations they seem to have was that we might want to regulate the admission of certain criminal classes. I am glad to say that the correspondence shows that our commissioners did not intend to be misunderstood or to be misled on that question. They stated in the clearest language:

> We do not stand on an assertion of the right of self-protection against dangerous characters. We are here to obtain an assertion of the right to distinguish between Chinese and other races, and the right to distinguish between laborers and other classes, and we will be content with nothing else.

The representatives of the last administration, therefore, in their intercourse with China expressly announced that "we are here to obtain an assertion"—of what? Let my friend who has just taken his seat [Mr. TAYLOR] listen to what they say: "We are here to obtain an assertion of the right to distinguish between the Chinese and other races." And mark you what further they say in connection with this bill: "And the right to distinguish between laborers and other classes, and we will be content with nothing else."

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me read article 1 of the treaty:

> Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country, or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees—

We do not agree; in the very terms of this treaty China agrees—> that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it.

Now, has that period arrived? Does this immigration affect or threaten to affect the interests of this country? Have we forgotten the ferment in 1876 in California? Have we forgotten the terrible scenes of disorder in that section? The great city of San Francisco was threatened with the most destructive elements of mob violence—threatened not with temporary but permanent injury, because the causes leading to the outbreak were not ephemeral, but were deep, ingrained in race struggles and in the conflicts of antagonistic classes of laborers, and have since only been stilled by hopes of Federal amelioration.

But my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has asked me whether I think that the country itself at large may be endangered. Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that this immigration should continue at the rate of 20,000 a year; suppose that the sentiment of the Pacific coast, that sentiment which by its demonstrations of opposition almost prohibited the importation of the Chinese for many years, should be ignored or suppressed. Suppose that railroad companies or any other organizations should be permitted without restraint to resort to China under the sanction of that government for labor—labor protected in the manner I have already indicated. What condition of things would we have in ten years on the Pacific coast? You will have very quickly 300,000 male adults, representing, if followed by women and children, a population of over a million and a half. Suppose, further, that this immigration should be stimulated by the industries in other sections of the country until it should be felt there to the same extent as on that coast. In time of financial distress what power could control the angry spirit of labor that would threaten every section of this land; that spirit which led to the most horrible disorders we have ever witnessed in times of peace; that spirit whose fierce manifestations brought appeals from shuddering State authorities for Federal aid and demands for an increase of the Army from the dismayed capitalists of the country? I hope never to see such a situation in my State. I do not want to see it in Massachusetts; and as I do not want to see it there, I go out in my heart to my friends from California and say, "I do not want to thrust into your midst a male population that has no citizenship, no attraction to your soil, to drive out your own people and in time of excitement to pillage and burn property, and to murder your citizens."

Mr. Speaker, it is said that this bill goes far beyond the scope of the treaty. I do not think so. When we come to consider the earnestness of the American people, when we listen to the voice of the Pacific coast on this question, when we read the platforms of the two great parties of this country, I think we will interpret the provisions of the treaty very differently from what the Government of China would have done when it was totally oblivious to our attitude on this subject. I think that in behalf of the people of the Pacific coast, and in fidelity to them, we should not leave this matter to the understanding of the Emperor of China, but should act upon it as becomes the legislative body of this land.

Mr. Speaker, we are told that the restriction of twenty years is too long. Sir, that is a matter of discretion for us. By this bill we do not absolutely prohibit Chinese immigration, but we say that this population which has worked such detriment to the laboring interests of this country, which has so disturbed its peace, which now constitutes one-third of the male adult population of the Pacific coast, shall stand where it is for the period of twenty years. We mean to make clear our purpose; and if at the expiration of that time public sentiment on this question shall have changed, if this population shall have disappeared in part, (for it cannot be expected it can do so entirely,) then we will take up the question from a new standpoint. But we want to say to the generation of to-day in California, "As to you, we propose to suspend this incursion and stop this excitement in your midst."

Sir, I am afraid that gentlemen who propose to make the time shorter, who want a limitation of only three or five or ten years, desire to have this question come up again at a time when the conditions of that coast may be such that it cannot make the potent demand that it can to-day. I propose to grant the people of the Pacific States in this very bill the substantial benefit to which they are entitled.

But, sir, we having the power to legislate on this subject, if the Chinese Government should be dissatisfied with our exercise of this power, what is the remedy under the treaty? Simply this:

> If the measures as enacted are found to work hardships upon the subjects of China, the Chinese minister at Washington may bring the matter to the notice of the Secretary of State of the United States, who will consider the subject with him; and the Chinese foreign office may also bring the matter to the notice of the United States minister at Peking and consider the subject with him, to the end that mutual and unqualified benefit may result.

I take, sir, that it means neither more nor less than this: if the time shall be too long, if our conditions have been onerous in the view of that government, that then it may be a matter about which we should talk, negotiate, or initiate further treaty stipulations.

Mr. Speaker, we are told again that the passport system prescribed in this bill is objectionable. In this treaty the following article is found, which I will read in this connection. I refer to article 2. It is as follows:

> Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

Now, sir, in the great interests we have at stake, to guarantee these people against the incoming of more of this population, the Senate bill provides that the laborers now here, and a certain class mentioned in this article, such as teachers, students, &c., shall be subject to the passport system. Is that an unreasonable restriction? With the intelligent power, and the vast interests of the capital of this country, and the great necessity of securing labor in all parts of the country, and this particular kind of labor, if you shall not adopt the passport system who doubts but that this treaty is almost a mockery? Who doubts but that this people, eager to get away from their poverty and come into our land of plenty and live almost as animals will find their way and find co-operation here?

It would be difficult, as suggested, to restrain them if these regulations were such as to admit them to take any vessel they may choose and land at any port without any question except a prosecution, possibly, provided somebody wanted to do that when they came here. I say that it amounts to a practical opening of our ports without restriction to Chinese laborers of all classes.

Now, sir, permit me to say that the same thing would apply not only as to laborers now here but to all persons representing themselves as teachers, students, travelers, &c. Who can tell whether a Chinaman in San Francisco or Boston or New York, when he meets him, reached America before or after the adoption of the present treaty? Charge him with violating the law and what witness will prove it? Would you trust this matter to China? She has intrusted it to you in the treaty. Would you leave it to that government which, if we are to believe the testimony given by competent persons, has encouraged the cooly system by aiding people of other lands to make contracts of real servitude with their own people?

I am not willing, sir, that we shall lose the whole purpose of this bill by striking out the provision as to passports in our country. It is a wise provision. It works no unnecessary hardship, and it is not unjust or onerous in any sense of the word.

I take it, sir, that it would be the most unreasonable thing for the Chinese Government to insist that in the regulations that we shall make for restricting immigration of Chinese labor we may not, if need be, resort to the passport system. There is no other interference which we propose to apply to them except the passport provision; and that certainly is not an onerous exaction. For these reasons I am in favor of that provision in reference to passports, and in favor of every portion of this bill in all its paragraphs. I am entirely in favor of it.

Mr. Speaker, whenever the people of this country shall say to the people of the Pacific coast that the Chinaman is equal with the representative of any other nationality; that we propose to naturalize him; that we propose, if you please, to place around him all the conditions which may tend to make him assimilate with the people, the free people of this land, to bear its burdens, to create the products that belong to the great continent, and to multiply our wealth, then, and then only, will it be time for gentlemen to discuss sentimental questions.

But we have been proposing in our past policy to put down among the laboring population of that portion of our common country men not citizens—men under contracts which would not be permitted under the laws of any State of this Union, because subversive of individual liberty. A population of 75,000 of this class, ignorant, pagan, and polygamous; no families with them; coming to offend the decency of our people by surrounding themselves with 4,000 female prostitutes. It is enough to arouse the people; it is enough to arouse every man who has any sympathy with our fellow-citizens in that section.

It is no question of labor, it is a mere desire to escape responsibility that pleads it. It is a mere trick to say that it involves a question of labor. I trust, sir, that this House will, without any hesitation, without any amendment, enact this bill as it is, with these provisions, and give to that section a rest which they can never feel until we have granted this boon.

How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied a half hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care to occupy further the time of the House, and will yield the floor to my colleague, [Mr. SPEER.]

Mr. SPEER was recognized.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANNING. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] will go on this evening.

Mr. MANNING. It is now nearly five o'clock and is about our usual time for adjournment. I presume it will be more agreeable for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] to proceed to-morrow.

Mr. SPEER. I yield for the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONVERSE. Pending the motion to adjourn, I desire to present a bill for reference.

Mr. PAGE. I was in hopes the gentleman from Georgia would go on to-night.

Mr. SPEER. If I occupied my hour it would be within ten minutes of six before I got through.

Mr. PAGE. Before the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MANNING] insists on his motion to adjourn, I hope he will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] for a resolution.

Mr. MANNING. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] to introduce a bill, and also to the gentleman from New York.

CONSOLIDATION OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. CONVERSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5226) to prohibit the consolidation of railroad companies, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JACOB R. SHIPHERD.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be directed to demand of Jacob R. Shipherd, esq., copies of all correspondence between himself and any person or persons whatsoever, and all other evidence in his possession, tending to show what said Shipherd did or attempted to do to enforce the claims of the Peruvian Company, or to induce the United States to enforce these claims against Peru.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL FORCE IN FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. HOUK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ twelve additional laborers in the House folding-room for the purpose of folding speeches; to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $720 per annum while employed; provided that the said twelve additional employés shall be dropped from the rolls of the Doorkeeper at a period not more than one month after the expiration of the present session.

OVERFLOWED DISTRICT IN LOUISIANA.

HARBOR OF REFUGE ON LAKE PEPIN.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I ask unanimous consent to present for reference to the Committee on Commerce a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin for an appropriation for a harbor of refuge on the eastern shore of Lake Pepin, near the village of Stockholm. I also ask unanimous consent that the memorial be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

STATE OF WISCONSIN, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Madison, March 10, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin to Congress, in accordance with the resolution of the Legislature.

Very respectfully,

J. M. RUSK.

Hon. RICHARD GUENTHER, M. C., Washington D. C.

Memorial to Congress for an appropriation for a harbor of refuge on the eastern shore of Lake Pepin, near the village of Stockholm.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully represents:

That there is not at the present time any harbor or protection to shipping or commercial interests, either natural or artificial, at any point on the eastern shore of Lake Pepin. That a very large business, by boats, crafts, log and lumber rafts, is annually transacted on said lake, and that the same is annually damaged many thousands of dollars, and the commerce and trade of the entire Upper Mississippi River greatly impaired, by the lack of some place of refuge and safety from the wind and storms frequent upon said body of water. That the estimated cost of the construction of a harbor near Stockholm which will furnish perfect safety, and of sufficient capacity to accommodate all interests, shipping and of commerce, is $200,000, as made by United States engineer Captain McKenzie.

Therefore, your memorialist respectfully requests that an appropriation be made by the present Congress for the construction of said harbor.

SAM. S. FIFIELD,
President of the Senate.
FRANKLIN L. GILSON,
Speaker of the Assembly.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, State Department, ss:

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Ernst G. Timme, secretary of state of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby certify that the foregoing has been compared by me with the original in this office, and that the same is a true and correct copy thereof, and of the whole of such original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at the capitol, in the city of Madison, this 9th day of March, A. D. 1882.

[SEAL.]

ERNST G. TIMME,
Secretary of State.

NICARAGUAN CLAIMS.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time a Senate concurrent resolution looking to a communication between this Government and the Government of Nicaragua in reference to the settlement of unadjusted claims. This same resolution passed the Senate on two or three occasions. It has now the approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. It takes no money out of the Treasury, and merely requests the President to open communications with the Government of Nicaragua. I hope unanimous consent will be given to consider the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

In the Senate of the United States, March 10, 1882:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President be requested to bring to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua the necessity of arranging by a convention for final settlement of all unadjusted claims existing between the Government of the United States and the Government of Nicaragua and claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. DUNNELL. That resolution has passed the Senate and received the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WILSON. As I have already stated, it takes no money out of the Treasury.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think it is a very proper resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the resolution be reported again.

The resolution was again read.

There being no objection, the resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. McCOID. I desire to offer a substitute for the bill now under discussion, and to have it printed in the RECORD, so that members may have it in their possession to-morrow.

Mr. PAGE. That is not to be considered as an amendment pending.

The SPEAKER. It is an amendment proposed but not pending. Is there objection to the proposed substitute being printed in the RECORD?

There was no objection. It is as follows:

An act to restrict Chinese immigration.

Whereas in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory thereof: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after ninety days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of ten years next after the passage of this act, no Chinese shall be permitted to come as laborers from China to the United States; and during such period it shall not be lawful for Chinese having come to the United States as laborers after the expiration of said ninety days to remain within the United States.

SEC. 2. All Chinese who shall come in numbers exceeding fifteen in any one vessel, or who shall come under any contract with any corporation, company, or person within the United States or China to do or perform labor, or whose transportation to the United States shall be furnished by any corporation, company, or person without charge or by virtue of a contract or agreement to pay therefor in labor or in wages, to be paid after arrival within the United States, shall be construed to come as laborers in violation of this act.

SEC. 3. That any master of any vessel of whatever nationality who shall knowingly on such vessel bring within the jurisdiction of the United States and permit to be landed any Chinese laborers from any foreign port or place in violation of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each and every such Chinese laborer so brought, and may be also imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 4. Any corporation, company, or person who shall through himself, his agent or other person, directly or indirectly, import from China or any foreign port or place any Chinese as laborers, or contract for the same to be imported, or receive and employ such persons coming into the United States as laborers, or aid in procuring the importation or bringing into the United States such persons as laborers, in violation of this act, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each person so brought, and may be also imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 5. Any vessel, belonging in whole or in part to a citizen of the United States, and registered, enrolled, or otherwise licensed therein, used or employed knowingly by the owners thereof in transporting persons in violation of this act, with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and other appurtenances shall be forfeited to the United States, and shall be liable to be seized, prosecuted, and condemned in any of the circuit courts or district courts of the United States for the district where the vessel may be found, seized, or carried.

SEC. 6. The foregoing sections shall not apply to Chinese who were in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880; nor shall the two foregoing sections apply to the case of any master whose vessel, being bound to a port not within the United States, shall come within the jurisdiction of the United States by reason of being in distress or in stress of weather.

SEC. 7. In order to the faithful execution of articles 1 and 2 of the treaty between the United States and the Empire of China, ratified July 19, 1881, and to the faithful execution of this act, every Chinese who may be entitled by said treaty and this act as an ordinary immigrant to come within the United States, except such as resided in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or who shall have come within the United States within ninety days next after the passage of this act, shall obtain the permission of the Chinese Government in each case, to be evidenced by a passport issued by said government, which passport shall be in the English language or accompanied by a translation into English, showing such permission, with the name of the permitted person in his proper signature, or, if signed by his mark, attested by a witness, and which passport shall state the name, title, or official rank, if any, the height, and any physical peculiarities, and place of residence in China of the person to whom the passport is issued, and that such person is entitled by the treaty under this act mentioned to come within the United States. This passport and the identity of the person named in it shall, before such person goes on board any vessel to proceed to the United States, be visèd by the indorsement of the diplomatic representative of the United States in the Empire of China, or of the consular representative of the United States at the port or place from which the person named in the passport is about to depart.

SEC. 8. No master of any vessel owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States, or by a citizen of any foreign country, shall take on board such vessel, at any foreign port or place whatever, any Chinese, except accredited officers of the Chinese Government traveling on the business of the government, unless such Chinese shall first produce to him the permission of the Chinese Government, attested by the consular officer of the United States as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 9. The master of any vessel arriving in the United States, or any of the Territories thereof, from any foreign place whatever, at the same time that he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and if there be no cargo, then at the time of making report of entry of the vessel pursuant to law, shall, in addition to the other matters required to be reported by law, deliver and report to the collector of the district in which such vessel shall arrive a separate list of all Chinese passengers taken on board the vessel at any foreign port or place, and of all such passengers on board the vessel at that time; such list shall be sworn to by the master in the same manner as directed by law in relation to the manifest of the cargo; and the refusal or neglect of the master to comply with the provisions of this section shall receive the same penalties, disabilities, and forfeitures as are provided for a refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of the cargo.

SEC. 10. This act shall not apply to diplomatic and other officers of the Chinese Government traveling upon the business of that government, whose credentials in the usual form shall be taken as equivalent to the passport in this act mentioned, and shall exempt them and their body and household servants from the provisions of this act as to other Chinese.

SEC. 11. Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the ordinary and voluntary individual immigration of persons not contracted for as laborers, in numbers not exceeding fifteen in any one vessel, from the Chinese Empire, as immigration is now permitted from all other nations.

SEC. 12. Residents of the United States from the empire of China may be admitted to citizenship according to the provisions of the uniform naturalization laws: Provided, That they shall have resided therein ten years, and for five years previous to their naturalization shall have adopted the manners, customs, dress, and general habits of citizens of the United States.

DONATION OF LAND TO SAINT LOUIS.

Mr. CLARDY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5227) donating to the City of Saint Louis, Missouri, a certain strip of land for street purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT LICENSE LAW.

Mr. BREWER. I offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk. I think there will be no objection to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby directed to investigate fully the practical workings of the license law of the District of Columbia; that they have power to send for persons and papers and report the result of such inquiry to this House at as early a day as is compatible with a thorough investigation of this subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. Let the resolution be referred to the District Committee.

Mr. BREWER. Very well.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

JOHN W. THOMPSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. DEZENDORF, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5228) for the relief of John W. Thompson and others, constituting the executive committee on the inaugural ceremonies of March 4, 1881; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF SHIPPING.

Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5229) for the relief of shipping; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF CUT TIMBER ON MENOMONEE RESERVATION.

Mr. POUND. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] withdraws his objection to the request I made this morning to take from the House Calendar and pass at this time the bill (H. R. No. 2736) authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin. I again make that request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. DUNNELL. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. POUND. The bill has been favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. It it a departmental bill, and was introduced by myself at the instance of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks to have the bill read, reserving his right to object. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be sold at public sale to the highest bidder, for cash, after due public advertisement, and in such lots or quantities as he may deem judicious, all pine timber cut upon the Monomonee Indian reservation during the winter of 1876 and 1877, under the direction of the then United States Indian agent, J. C. Bridgman.

SEC. 2. That the proceeds arising from all sales of such timber shall be applied first to the payment of any and all indebtedness incurred for labor, supplies, and other expenses incident to the cutting and sale of said timber, and the surplus, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, and expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering at this time the bill which has just been read? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, having considered the bill (H. R. No. 2736) authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation, in Wisconsin, report the same back without amendment, and recommend that it do pass, and that the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, herewith submitted, be embodied in this report:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 18, 1882.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of this date, transmitting H. R. 2736, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, 'A bill authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin,' and requesting my opinion thereon.

On the 26th April, 1876, an act of Congress (19 Stat., 37) was passed authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation, in Wisconsin, under the direction of this Department, in compliance with which such logs were subsequently sold.

It has since transpired that there are from a million to a million and a half feet of pine logs lying skidded in the woods on the Menomonee reservation which were cut subsequent to the passage of said act, namely, during the winter of 1876-'77, under the direction of the then United States Indian agent J. C. Bridgman, contrary to the express orders of this Department, issued to him on the 14th of January, 1876.

This timber is depreciating in value every year from being worm-eaten, besides the great danger of forest fires, and unless soon sold will be a total loss.

The bill submitted by you, which is herewith returned, is identical with one forwarded by this office on the 5th instant to the Department for transmission to Congress, and meets with my entire approval.

Very respectfully,

H. PRICE, Commissioner.

Hon. T. C. POUND,
House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] now asks consent to extend that order so as to include bills reported from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. That will not include any general legislation?

Mr. STEELE. No general legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Only private bills.

Mr. STEELE. Private bills only.

Mr. SPARKS. How long does the order continue?

The SPEAKER. As made, it is a continuing order.

Mr. SPARKS. During this session?

The SPEAKER. Until the further order of the House. The House may rescind it.

Mr. HAWK. It refers only to business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. To business on the Private Calendar relating to pensions.

Mr. SPARKS. I understand that the order relates only to pension bills.

The SPEAKER. To pension cases on the Private Calendar. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] asks to have the order include pension bills reported from the Committee on Pensions as well as those reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Is there objection to the modification of the order?

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Elections, including sub-committees of that committee, have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

USE OF UNITED STATES TROOPS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred a resolution of inquiry, have instructed me to report the same back, and recommend its adoption with amendments to strike out the preamble and to insert, after the word "requested," the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish to this House at the earliest practicable moment all the facts before him at the time he authorized the sending or employment of troops or military forces of the United States in the State of Nebraska during the present month, together with his reasons therefor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to ask that the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to have printed such portions of the report just presented and the accompanying papers as that committee may deem proper.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEELE, for seven days;

To Mr. VAN AERNAM, indefinitely;

To Mr. HARDENBERGH, until Tuesday next;

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1882.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting that 6,000 copies of the History of the National Loans of the United States, prepared for the Tenth Census, now being printed at the Government Printing Office, be reserved for that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents a joint resolution of the Legislature of Iowa in relation to the investment of the endowment fund of the Iowa Agricultural College, which will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and printed in the RECORD. The Chair will hereafter order the joint resolutions of State Legislatures to be entered in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

[Joint resolution No. 7.]

Memorial and joint resolution in relation to the investment of the endowment fund of the Iowa Agricultural College.

Whereas it is provided by section 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, that all moneys received from the sale of land donated by said act shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the State, or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than 5 per cent. upon the par value of said stocks; and

Whereas the fund arising from the sale of the land granted the State of Iowa by the said act can be safely and more profitably invested in approved real estate securities:

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators be instructed and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence to secure such amendment to the present law as will permit the State to loan said fund on real estate security, under such rules and regulations for its safe investment as the General Assembly shall hereafter adopt.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State shall be directed to forward to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives a copy of the foregoing resolution, with the request that the same be laid before each House of Congress, and that a copy be sent to each Senator and Member of Congress from this State.

Approved, March 11, 1882.

Mr. JACKSON presented the petition of Richardson K. Baird, late private Company E, Second Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMDEN presented resolutions of the board of health of West Virginia, in favor of conferring sufficient authority on the National Board of Health to empower it to effectually prevent the introduction of diseases into the United States; which were referred to the Select Committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. McDILL. I present a joint resolution and memorial of the General Assembly of Iowa, in relation to the investment of the endowment fund of the Iowa Agricultural College, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would inform the Senator from Iowa that he has just presented a similar memorial, which he directed to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the memorials should be referred to the Committee on Finance, as they relate to a question of the investment of money on hand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Ohio is right, and the reference of the joint resolution presented by the Chair will be changed. The memorial just presented by the Senator from Iowa will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of five officers of the Twenty-first Regiment Infantry, United States Army, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 1475) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLATER presented additional papers in the matter of the claim of Jacob Fritz to certain lands now included in Fort Dalles military reservation, in Wasco County, Oregon; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN. I present a petition of a number of leading citizens of Savannah, Georgia, praying for an adequate appropriation to improve the harbor of that city so as to accommodate the large commerce that passes in and out through that harbor. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of F. W. Loucks and 12 others, citizens of New York; the petition of Thomas Cochran, jr., and 24 others, citizens of Minnesota; and the petition of George A. Karner and 79 others, citizens of New Jersey, praying for a reform in the method of appointment to subordinate executive offices; which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

DAVIS ISLAND DAM.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1514) appropriating $100,000 for continuing the work on Davis Island dam, to report it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. If there is no objection I should like the Senate to take up the bill and put it on its passage at once.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably and without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 4440) to establish a railway bridge across the Mississippi River extending from a point between Wabasha and Read's Landing, in Minnesota, to a point below the mouth of the Chippewa River, in Wisconsin.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If there is no objection, I should like to have that bill acted on.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is quite a long bill. I think it had better be put on the Calendar, and the Senator will have a chance to call it up at some other time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It has been reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce, and has passed the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but it is not exactly right to take up the morning hour by considering bills just reported.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It was not exactly right perhaps to take up the bill appropriating $100,000 for the work on the Davis Island dam and pass it when it was reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is quite a different thing. It is for continuing work.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is a different thing, but that does not make any difference in the principle.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will state for the information of the Senate that this bill provides for the erection of a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River. The company constructing the road are pressed for passing the river now, and if the bill is passed they can proceed with the work without interruption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought I objected. It is a long bill, and I do not think it ought to be taken up in the morning hour.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill is not a long bill, if that is the only objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is to be understood that it is discourteous to object to the present consideration of bills, let us take them up in their order as they are reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is sufficient. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 813) to amend section 5254, title 63, Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the use of piers and cribs in the Mississippi River, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McMILLAN. Some time since, during the present session, the Secretary of State addressed a communication to the Committee on Commerce, informing the committee that the Government of the Netherlands had invited our Government to participate in a general colonial and export trade exposition to be held at Amsterdam in 1883, and suggesting that our Government take action to be represented on that occasion. The committee have considered the matter and have instructed me to report a joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing the Government of the United States to accept the invitation of the Government of the Netherlands to take part in a general colonial and export trade exhibition to be held in Amsterdam in the year 1883 was read twice by its title.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, agents, or assigns, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 602) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinthe Robert Agnel, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 597) for the relief of Richard Oulahan, late of the One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1712) for the relief of Chaplain M. J. Kelly and others, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the House report in the case.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1340) for the relief of the heirs at law of William R. Downing, deceased, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1407) to determine the local rank of the governor of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1305) to provide for the payment of female nurses during the war, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

CATTLE DISEASES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution to print 3,000 copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating the report of "the Treasury cattle commission on the lung plague of cattle," have instructed me to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 3,000 copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated the 13th of February, 1882, communicating the report of "the Treasury cattle commission on the lung plague of cattle," be printed with paper covers, for the use of the Senate.

REIMBURSEMENT TO SENATOR BUTLER.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $3,500 to M. C. BUTLER, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, in reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defense of his title to his seat.

REIMBURSEMENT TO SENATOR KELLOGG.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $9,550 to WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, in reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defense of his title to his seat.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1501) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MILLER, of California, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1502) for the relief of the State of California and the citizens thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1503) to confirm the land-claim of the pueblo of Laguna, in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

He also (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1504) to authorize Charles William Siemens and Frederick Siemens to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of their patent for a regenerator furnace; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HOAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1505) granting an increase of pension to John D. Terry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALKER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1506) to carry into effect the finding of the Army board convened under Special Order No. 228, Department of Washington, dated September 13, 1864, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1507) for the relief of John A. Coan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1509) for deepening the entrance and the northwest channel of the harbor of Key West, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAULSBURY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1510) for the relief of John H. Schabinger, guardian of Susan McKnatt and Martha McKnatt, minor daughters of James McKnatt, deceased; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that this bill passed the Senate at the last Congress, but did not get through the House. There was at that time a petition accompanying the bill setting forth the facts which induced the Finance Committee to report favorably and the Senate to pass that bill. That petition I have not been able to find on the files of the Senate, and have caused search to be made on the files of the House to find it. This gentleman, Mr. Schabinger, was the guardian of certain wards entitled to a fund at the Pension Office. A check was sent to him for $1,001; that check never reached him. This bill is to authorize the issue of a duplicate check to him in place of the one which has been lost. The facts, perhaps, may be remembered by the Finance Committee, and I simply state these facts so as to direct their attention to the case. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1511) for the erection of a building for the use of the Geological Survey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CALL asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1512) extending the operations of the Light-House Board over the Saint John's River, within the State of Florida, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GROOME asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1513) for the relief of Orville Horwitz, trustee for C. D. De Ford & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 53) for the printing of the memorial address on the life and character of James A. Garfield, late President of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of William Cash, of Princeton, Kentucky, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PROVIDENCE CHANNEL.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to transmit to the Senate estimates of the cost of increasing the depth of the main ship-channel of Providence River and harbor to twenty-five feet, with three hundred feet in width at mean low water; also to report what portion of the estimated cost of said improvement can be expended to advantage during the next fiscal year.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2736) authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3869) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate requesting the President to bring to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua the necessity of arranging by a convention for the final settlement of all unadjusted claims existing between the Government of the United States and the Government of Nicaragua and claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua.

CALENDAR OF RESOLUTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the morning business is closed.

In accordance with the announcement of yesterday, the Chair will call up resolutions instead of bills to-day. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was not present yesterday when the Chair announced that ordinary resolutions were meant in the Anthony rule when the words "Calendar of Bills and Resolutions" were inserted, and that he would to-day call up resolutions that had been partially discussed, and then other resolutions, unless the Senate should otherwise order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not begin at the beginning of the Calendar of Resolutions?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Missouri is that the Chair commence at the beginning of the Calendar of Resolutions, which would be a proper proceeding.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to say in regard to the resolution which was partly considered when the Senate reached the end of the morning hour a day or two ago, (which suggested this question to the Chair,) a resolution for providing another standing committee, some Senators who are opposed to that resolution—I am myself in favor of it, as the Chair will recollect—are absent, and I shall therefore ask that it lie over this morning without being called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first resolution on the Calendar will be called.

CLERKS FOR SENATORS.

The resolution submitted by Mr. BROWN January 11, 1882, authorizing each Senator who is not a chairman of a committee to appoint a clerk at a salary of $1,200 per annum, &c., was announced as the first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator who offered that resolution desire that it be considered now?

Mr. SHERMAN. It had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

SUFFRAGE IN UTAH.

The next resolution on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 11th of January, directing the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage to examine into the state of suffrage in Utah Territory, and report a bill to set aside certain laws conferring upon women the right of suffrage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of that resolution was objected to at the time it was submitted, and in the absence of the Senator who submitted it the resolution will be passed over for the present.

COINAGE AND CURRENCY.

The next resolution on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. BROWN on the 12th of January last, declaring that it is inexpedient and unwise to contract the currency by the withdrawal from circulation of the silver certificates, &c., and that gold and silver, upon a proper ratio of equivalence, &c., constitute the true circulating medium of this country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia made a speech on that subject. Does he wish the resolution referred?

Mr. BROWN. I wish action on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient and unwise to contract the currency by the withdrawal from circulation of what are known as silver certificates, or to discontinue or further restrict the coinage of silver.

Resolved further, That gold and silver coin, based upon a proper ratio of equivalence between the two metals, and issues of paper, predicated upon and convertible into coin on demand, constitute the proper circulating medium of this country.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. COKE and Mr. BROWN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER,] but I understand he would vote against the reference of the pending resolution. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL.] I voted, but if his colleague [Mr. BROWN] desires me to withdraw my vote I shall do so.

Mr. BROWN. I will not ask it. I believe that my colleague, if here, would vote against a reference of the resolution; but I am not sure of it, and I will not ask the Senator from Maine to withdraw his vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that my colleague, [Mr. VEST,] who is indisposed and unable to be present to-day, is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.] I do not see the Senator from Kansas in his seat. I am satisfied that my colleague would vote "nay" if present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would inform the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has voted on this proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. He doubtless had forgotten the pair.

Mr. ALLISON. Will his vote make any difference in the result?

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that it will not.

Mr. GARLAND, (after having voted in the negative.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who I see is not in his seat this morning. I withdraw my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired for the day with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 24; as follows:

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

The next resolution on the Calendar of resolutions was a resolution proposing amendments to Rules 13 and 24 of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is reported adversely from the Committee on Rules, and will go over.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH MEXICO.

The next resolution on the Calendar was a concurrent resolution providing that the trade and commerce between Mexico and the United States should be regulated by a treaty of reciprocity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who submitted this resolution wish to have it considered now?

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be passed over. I will call it up on a subsequent day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that it would be a great deal better in regard to these resolutions to allow the Senator submitting a resolution to call it up when he desires, just previous to the call for bills under the Anthony rule. Otherwise, it will take a good deal of time to go over them in this way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well, if that is the pleasure of the Senate; but we can go through with and get rid of them in a few minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but then, having been passed over, they will be called up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, resolutions will not be called further, and the Senate will proceed with the Calendar of Bills. The Chair will hear any suggestion to call up a resolution at the close of the morning business. The first bill on the Calendar will be reported.

SALE OF LOTTERY TICKETS.

The bill (S. No. 1047) to punish the selling and advertising of lottery tickets in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that it shall not be lawful within the District of Columbia for any person to sell, or by any means advertise or publish an advertisement for the sale at any place, or act as an agent for such sale or advertisement, any lottery ticket or tickets, or any interest therein, of any scheme of chance, or of any game of chance, wherever the same may be situate or is to be drawn. Any person violating any of these provisions may be prosecuted therefor in the police court of the District, and if found guilty fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000 nor less than $100, or be imprisoned in the jail of the District for a period not exceeding twelve months nor less than one month, as the court shall adjudge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA BAINBRIDGE HOFF.

The bill (S. No. 526) for the relief of Louisa Bainbridge Hoff was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that there shall be paid out of the Navy pension fund, to Mrs. Louisa Bainbridge Hoff, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Henry K. Hoff, United States Navy, $50 per month during her widowhood, the same to be in lieu of her present pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. PLATT. As I understand, no payments are made now out of the Navy pension fund, and I do not think the bill in its present terms would be operative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] reported the bill from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Navy pension fund I think is available to pay pensions.

Mr. JACKSON. The point now made was not called to the attention of the committee. We reported the bill as it was referred to us.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill lie over without prejudice for a while.

Mr. JACKSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over for a little while, without prejudice.

Mr. PLATT subsequently said: I wish that the bill for the relief of Mrs. Hoff be now taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill (S. No. 526) for the relief of Louisa Bainbridge Hoff.

Mr. PLATT. I will withdraw any suggestion that I made. I do not desire to offer any amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed

DUNCAN M. V. STUART.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 764) for the relief of Duncan M. V. Stuart.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was adversely reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Possibly no one wishes to keep the bill on the Calendar.

Mr. WINDOM. I prefer to have it remain on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will remain on the Calendar, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

LOSS OF STEAMER J. DON CAMERON.

The bill (S. No. 857) for the relief of the sufferers by the loss of the Government steamer J. Don Cameron was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask a question. It is suggested to me that probably a similar bill has passed the House of Representatives. Has such a bill come here, I ask?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. LOGAN. If it was here I intended to have that substituted; but if not it is all right.

Mr. HARRIS. Is there a printed report in this case?

Mr. LOGAN. There is a report which states the facts about as they are stated in the bill. It is a long report.

Mr. HARRIS. I will not ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill passed the Senate unanimously after reading the report at a former session.

Mr. HARRIS. I will not insist on a call for the reading of the report.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVE IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

The bill (S. No. 1048) to amend section 1682 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1682 of the Revised Statutes, so as to read:

SEC. 1682. There shall be but one envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua; and the President may select the place of residence for the minister in any one of those states. And he shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of that bill.

Mr. WINDOM. The object of the bill is to increase the rank of the representative of the United States at the countries named in the bill. We now have a "minister resident" to those countries, and the Secretary of State recommended that the title of the representative be "envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary." It does not increase the salary; it does not increase the number of ministers or representatives, but simply gives a higher grade to our representative in those countries. That is the whole of it. It is believed, I will say before I sit down, that it will be an advantage to the United States under the existing circumstances to have there a minister of higher grade.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would ask the Senator from Minnesota if it is expected that this minister shall travel from one capital to another, and if the modes of intercourse between those countries are not such that it would be almost easier for him to come home and start again?

Mr. WINDOM. It is expected that he will travel from one country to the other as the representative of this country now does.

Mr. ANTHONY. Could he visit each capital once a year without taking up the whole of his time in travel?

Mr. WINDOM. I can hardly answer that question. Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua are the countries named. There is but one minister there now.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Secretary of State recommends the bill, I have no objection.

Mr. WINDOM. I will read the section which it is proposed to amend:

SEC. 1682. There shall be but one minister resident accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua; and the President may select the place of residence for the minister in any one of those states. And he shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

The only difference between that section and the amendment is that this says there shall be but one envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought it diminished the number.

Mr. WINDOM. It does not. It simply changes the title.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I think the bill is very proper.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB E. BURBANK.

The bill (S. No. 156) for the relief of Major Jacob E. Burbank was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the proper accounting officers of the Treasury in the settlement of the accounts of Major Jacob E. Burbank, late paymaster United States Army, to allow him such credits for overpayments and for losses of funds and vouchers as they may deem just and reasonable, when recommended, under the authority of the Secretary of War, by the Paymaster-General, not to exceed $2,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. W. THOMPSON AND OTHERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to consider the claims of G. W. Thompson & Co., of Pennsylvania; J. M. Atherton & Co., C. Miller & Brother, and W. S. Hume, of Kentucky; Harrison & Small, of Tennessee; C. Dodsworth, of Ohio; and N. S. Chouteau, surety for H. H. Bodemann, of Missouri, for tax paid on excess of materials, or for deficiency, and to refund the same, or such parts thereof as fall within the principles of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Stoll vs. Pepper, and in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the aggregate amount allowed and paid under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $8,654.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CONCORD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1034) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Concord, in the State of New Hampshire; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I again ask unanimous consent that a few more bills for public buildings for the capitals of States where they have an urgent demand for public buildings shall be considered at this time. There are four of them, I think. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been exceedingly economical both as to the number of buildings and the amount of appropriations reported from that committee at the present session, and we have given the preference where buildings are really required to the capitals of States. There are but four or five now without them. I ask that those bills may now be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that four bills upon the Calendar reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, authorizing the erection of public buildings at the capitals of States, be now taken up.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is another bill in regard to a public building, and I ask that that be included.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the arrangement proposed.

Mr. McMILLAN. With the understanding that Senate bill No. 731 be included.

Mr. ALLISON. No understanding.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let these four bills go through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the Calendar be displaced for the time being, so as to take up the four bills indicated for the erection of public buildings in the capitals of States.

Mr. MORRILL. The four will not take five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont. There is no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. The first of these bills is Senate bill No. 1061.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT AUGUSTA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1061) for the erection of a public building in the city of Augusta, Maine.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FRANKFORT.

Mr. MORRILL. The next is Senate bill No. 361.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 361) for a public building at Frankfort, Kentucky.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment, in line 16, after the word "insure," to insert "the purchase of a site and," and in line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert "which said sum is hereby appropriated for the purposes herein named out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to read:

Said plans to be based upon calculations and specifications that will insure the purchase of a site and the completion of the building at a cost not to exceed the sum of $100,000; which said sum is hereby appropriated for the purposes herein named out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN JEFFERSON CITY.

Mr. MORRILL. The next is Senate bill No. 889.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 889) to provide for the erection of a public building in Jefferson City, in the State of Missouri.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "city," to insert:

Which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MONTPELIER.

Mr. MORRILL. The next is Senate bill No. 1383.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1383) to provide for the erection of a public building at Montpelier, Vermont.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROVIDENCE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. MORRILL. There is one bill for one other capital here, being Senate bill No. 373.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is also Senate bill No. 731.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Chair shall call up all bills for the erection of public buildings?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate has already decided to do so.

Mr. CONGER. I think it is more important to the interest of the country to attend to the life-saving service.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate agreed to take up the bills for public buildings, and they are not through yet.

Mr. ROLLINS. There is a capital omitted; that in Nevada.

Mr. ANTHONY. Senate bill No. 373 is the next in order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 373) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, after the word "land," in line 8, to insert "in the city of Providence, Rhode Island."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President——

Mr. McMILLAN. There is one other bill for a public building, Senate bill No. 731.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has the floor.

Mr. McMILLAN. He will not object to the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Michigan yield until these public-building bills are passed?

Mr. CONGER. If the Chair recognizes me I yield this time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that Senate bill No. 731 be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 731) appropriating money for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CARSON CITY.

Mr. ROLLINS. I understood the order to include buildings for the capitals of the various States. Senate bill No. 911 has not yet been disposed of.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 911) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices in the city of Carson City, in the State of Nevada.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in section 1, line 8, after the word "city," to insert:

Which site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan, on account of the urgent necessity of the passage of the bill, asks the body to take up Senate bill No. 1.

Mr. ALLISON. It being bill No. 1, I think we ought to pass it any way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask that House bill No. 1049 be substituted for Senate bill No. 1 and passed with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill, then, will be taken up in place of the Senate bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1049) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck.

The Acting Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Before the reading was concluded,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past one has arrived. Will the Senate consent that the Anthony rule shall be extended long enough to conclude this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. If it does not take much time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to letting this bill go to the head of the Calendar to-morrow, but I want a chance to read the report. This bill proposes a large expenditure of money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be unanimous consent, it will be the first case to be called under the Anthony rule to-morrow.

Mr. FERRY. And it stands as the first case for to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. Before calling the unfinished business, the Chair will lay before the Senate some House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3869) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 2736) authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs have reported a bill identical in its terms with the bill which has passed the House, and has just been read by its title. I should like to ask that that bill be considered.

Mr. ALLISON. Wait a while.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Then let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I shall call it up at the earliest opportunity.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to lay aside the pending and all prior orders for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Informally?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir, informally.

Mr. HARRIS. That requires unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, it will be done. The Chair hears no objection.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3548) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 2, after the word "of," in line 3, to strike out "eight hundred and eighty-seven" and insert "one million nine hundred and seventy-seven;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That if the revenue of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, then the sum of $1,977,177.90, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1883.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. That the amount of all money-orders which shall have remained unpaid for a period of five years or more after the date of the issue thereof, which amount is to be ascertained and reported annually by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. The last amendment I desire to amend. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to it.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that the purpose of this amendment seems to have been misapprehended by him. It is not designed to outlaw the money-orders, but we find by the report of the Postmaster-General that there is a large amount of money to the credit of the postmaster at New York and postmasters throughout the country, more than is supposed to be necessary to redeem outstanding money-orders. That amount is to a large extent speculative, conjectural; and we design to fix a limit upon which the Treasury Department shall proceed as the basis of computation, and this does not in any way affect the payment of the outstanding orders. But to meet the objection which the Senator from Ohio has urged; I have an amendment which I will offer and which I think covers the point, if anything better than the one he has prepared, and is in accord with the law as it now stands. I call his attention to the fact that under the law as it now exists no money-order can be paid after it has been outstanding one year. The provision of law then is for the issue of a duplicate order, and the duplicate order is paid. I move to add at the close of this amendment:

But nothing herein shall be so construed as to prevent the payment, out of current money-order funds by duplicates issued upon the authority of the Postmaster-General, of any money-order which has remained unpaid more than five years.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that will cover the point. I think the committee's amendment as reported would have prevented the payment of money-orders after five years.

Mr. PLUMB. The Department did not think so, but as a matter of abundant precaution and following the line of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio I have drawn this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think either of these amendments is necessary. The section reported by the committee has no sort of connection with the question of when or how money-orders shall be paid. It only provides that certain moneys shall be covered into the Treasury after a certain time. There is always a great accumulation of money on this account during the intervening period of five years, and there will still be in the money-order office, after the sum proposed here is covered in, over $500,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that by the wording of the amendment as first reported, the money-order money that has been received and has been held in the Treasury for five years is covered into the Treasury formally by the words "shall be covered into the Treasury." That would prevent the Treasury from paying postal money-orders issued previous to five years; that would be the legal effect of the operation, and that I wish to avoid. As a matter of course gentlemen do not desire to defeat the payment of postal money-orders that have been five years out. Sometimes such a thing might occur, and when presented they ought to be paid just like a bond. Sometimes bonds come into the Treasury for payment which have been due for ten or fifteen years; yet they are promptly paid under permanent appropriations to cover such cases.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the modification.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that will cover the matter, reserving the right to pay them.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be ample funds to pay these money-orders.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to

Mr. PLUMB. I have an amendment to offer on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations. I move after the word "dollars," in line 18, to add:

And hereafter, in addition to the advertisement now required by law, the Postmaster-General shall cause a condensed advertisement of all general mail lettings of each State and Territory, and of the District of Columbia, as required by the provisions of an act approved May 17, 1878, entitled "An act to regulate the advertisement of mail lettings, and for other purposes," to be published in the District of Columbia, in one daily newspaper of each of the two principal political parties, and in one daily neutral newspaper: Provided, That the rates of compensation for such service shall in no case exceed the regular commercial rate of the newspaper selected; nor shall any advertisement be paid for unless published in accordance with section 3828 of the Revised Statutes: And provided, That the aggregate expenditure under this provision shall not exceed $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. There are no other committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] sent to the Chair an amendment. Does the Senator from New York wish to press his amendment now?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It is an amendment reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post-Roads. I withdraw it for the present for the Senator from Michigan, the chairman of that committee.

Mr. FERRY. I submit the following amendment:

After the word "dollars," in line 12, insert "and of this sum $3,000 shall be paid to the chief post-office inspector."

This does not increase the appropriation; it simply places the chief inspector on a par with the superintendent of the foreign and domestic mail service as well as the superintendent of the money-order office. He now gets but $2,500, and this is to place him on a par with the others. He has not only more duties to perform here locally in the Department, but he has to travel about the country to supervise the duties of some sixty-odd inspectors throughout the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I offer the following amendment:

After "dollars," in line 24, insert:

"For supplying fourth-class postmasters, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, with the necessary implements for canceling stamps and weighing and postmarking mail matter, not to exceed in value $5 to any one office, to be accounted for like other public property of the Government, and to be turned over to the successor in office, $35,000."

I think there can be no objection to this. It is simply providing for each postmaster of the fourth class, the proceeds of whose office do not exceed $75 a year, $5 to cover the letter-balance and the ink for the cancellation of postage-stamps. All officers above this have sufficient salary to pay for their own balances and for their ink. There should be uniformity. The practice now is to pick up any kind of ink, which is easily effaced from the postage-stamps, and a great deal of fraud and loss to the revenue of the Post-Office Department accrues. These postmasters cannot afford this expense. I have here letters from almost every State, and the Postmaster-General has stated that there are about five thousand letters in the Department from postmasters, in response to inquiries of the Department, saying that they cannot afford it out of the proceeds of their offices. The allowance is a mere pittance, but it is a method of securing uniformity which will conserve the best interests of the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the letter of the Postmaster-General may be read, that we may hear what he says.

Mr. FERRY. I have it here, and I send it to the desk.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the report of the superintendent of the blank agency upon the operations of his office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, found upon pages 461–463, inclusive, of the report of the Postmaster-General for 1881.

It will be seen from this report that at least 10,000 of the smaller offices of the United States are unsupplied with letter-balances or scales, and are therefore unable to accurately rate the postage upon matter mailed at their offices.

In consequence of this inability to properly rate up the postage, registered matter is sent from their offices without full prepayment as required by law and regulations; and when cases of this kind are reported to the Department, the postmaster is required to remit the deficiency of postage in uncanceled postage-stamps to the Department.

The amount thus collected is estimated at $200 a month, which, besides the cost of collecting, may be considered an unpleasant penalty against postmasters who execute their offices according to the supplies furnished by the Department, greatly more to the accommodation of the public than to their own private advantage.

It seems no more than just that where the postal business at any locality is sufficient to warrant the establishment of a post-office the Department should assume the expense of supplying the postmaster with the necessary supplies to properly conduct the business of his office.

I therefore recommend that an addition of $20,000 be made to the present appropriation of $15,000, making a total of $35,000, for the purchase of letter-balances and scales for the next fiscal year.

It is believed that with this additional appropriation the Department will be able to supply these postmasters, who have not received them, with letter-balances for the purpose of properly rating matter mailed at their offices.

Very respectfully,

T. O. HOWE, Postmaster-General.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Now I call up the amendment reported by me from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The Principal Legislative Clerk read the following amendment proposed as additional sections:

SEC. 4. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to make contracts for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports as in his judgment will best subserve and promote the postal and commercial interests of the United States, as hereinafter provided and directed.

SEC. 5. That the Postmaster-General shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, cause to be published, in at least one daily newspaper in the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Chicago, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, Louisville, New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, Savannah, Charleston, and San Francisco, this act, together with an advertisement inviting proposals for the performance of said mail service on such routes as he shall select; and such advertisement shall be inserted for a period of sixty days, during which time proposals will be received. At the expiration of the sixty days the Postmaster-General shall open all bids and proposals received, and shall contract with the lowest responsible bidder for the performance of said service on each of said routes; and contracts made in pursuance herewith shall be for the term of ten years. The mail service shall begin as soon as practicable after the execution of the contracts as aforesaid. The Postmaster-General shall require of each contractor a bond, with good and solvent sureties, under such terms and conditions and in such amount, not exceeding one year's compensation for service on the route contracted for, as in his opinion will secure the prompt and faithful performance of the said mail service; and said mail service shall be performed by said contractors under the rules and regulations now in force, or which may hereafter be enacted by Congress, or established by the Post-Office Department, for the proper reception, custody, and safe delivery of the mails.

SEC. 6. That the vessels employed in the mail service under the provisions of this act shall be steamships built in American ship-yards, and shall be owned by American citizens, or American corporations a majority of whose stock shall be owned by American citizens and a majority of whose stockholders shall be American citizens, and officered and manned by American citizens, and shall be constructed after the latest and most approved models, and with all the modern improvements and appliances for ocean steamers. They shall be divided into first, second, third, and fourth classes. The first class shall be iron or steel screw steamships, capable of making a speed of at least eighteen nautical miles per hour, of not less than four thousand tons burden; and it shall be stipulated in the contract or contracts to be entered into for the said mail service by vessels of the said first class that said vessels may carry passengers, with their baggage, in addition to the said mails, and may do all ordinary business done by steamships; and no vessel except of the said first class shall be accepted for the said mail service under the provisions of this act between the United States and Great Britain. And in order to secure the prompt and efficient transportation of the mails between the said countries it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to select and adopt such route or routes therefor as, in connection with the railway mail service, or otherwise, will secure the speediest transportation of the said mails to their destination. The second class shall not be less than three thousand tons burden, and shall be capable of making a speed of fourteen nautical miles per hour; the third class shall not be less than two thousand tons burden, and capable of a speed of thirteen nautical miles per hour; and the fourth class shall be of not less than one thousand tons burden, and capable of a speed of eleven nautical miles per hour.

SEC. 7. That the rate of compensation to be paid for such ocean mail service of the said first-class ships shall not exceed the sum of $3 per mile, by the shortest practicable route, for each outward-bound voyage: Provided, That in case of failure from any cause to perform any of the regular voyages of said first-class ships stipulated for in the said contracts, or any of them, a pro-rata deduction shall be made from the compensation on account of such omitted voyage or voyages; and that suitable fines and penalties may be imposed for delays or irregularities in the due performance of the service according to contract. That the annual rate of compensation to be paid for such ocean mail service shall, for the monthly service of the second-class ships, not exceed the sum of $30 per mile (one way) per annum; for the third-class ships shall not exceed the sum of $25 per mile (one way) per annum; and for the fourth-class ships shall not exceed the sum of $20 per mile (one way) per annum; or pro rata upon such basis of compensation for such more or less frequent service as the public interest may require. The aggregate sum to be paid by the Postmaster-General for such mail service shall not exceed the sum of $2,500,000 per annum; and the said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for said purpose, one-fifth to lines from the Pacific coast, two-fifths to lines from Philadelphia and ports on the Atlantic coast north thereof, and two-fifths to lines from Baltimore and ports on the Atlantic coast south thereof, including ports on the Gulf of Mexico; but after one year from the passage of this act any sum not required for contracts previously made may be appplied to additional contracts to be made for lines from any ports.

SEC. 8. That upon each of said vessels the United States shall be entitled to have transported free of charge, and with usual cabin accommodations, a mail-messenger to receive, take in charge, and deliver the mails to and from the United States.

SEC. 9. That the vessels employed as above shall, before they are accepted for the mail service herein provided for, be thoroughly inspected by a competent naval officer or constructor detailed for that service by the Secretary of the Navy; and said officer shall report in writing to the Secretary of the Navy (who shall transmit the said report to the Postmaster-General) the result of said inspection; and no vessel not approved by such inspection shall be employed by the Postmaster-General in the service provided for in this act. And said vessel shall be from time to time subject to inspection by a competent officer to be detailed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Navy; and it shall be the duty of such inspecting officer, immediately before the departure of any of the said vessels upon an outward-bound voyage, carefully to inspect such vessel and its furniture, equipments, and stores; and no such vessel shall be permitted to depart on such voyage until its master or other officer in command shall have received the certificate of the said inspecting officer setting forth the sea-worthiness of such vessel and the conformity thereof to all of the requirements of this act. And that the Government of the United States shall have the right, in case of war, to take for the use of the United States any or all of the vessels employed in the said lines, and in such case to pay a reasonable compensation therefor, which shall in no case exceed the original cost of such vessel or vessels.

SEC. 10. That regular officers of the United States Navy, on shore duty or on furlough, may volunteer for service on said mail vessels, and when accepted by the contractor or contractors may be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy; and while in said service they shall receive furlough pay from the Government, and shall receive such other compensation from the contractor or contractors as may be agreed upon by the parties: Provided, That they shall only be required to perform such duties as appertain to the merchant service.

SEC. 11. That the Postmaster-General shall, in his discretion, arrange the schedules of arrivals and departures of the said mails: Provided, That the average time required shall not be less than eighteen nautical miles per hour for the first-class, not less than fourteen nautical miles per hour for the second class, not less than thirteen nautical miles per hour for the third class, and not less than eleven nautical miles per hour for the fourth class: Provided further, That advertisements therefor shall have been duly made as provided in this act. The Postmaster-General may make deductions from the pay of contractors for failure to perform service according to contract; and any such deduction shall not exceed the amount of compensation for one trip.

SEC. 12. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing nine sections are hereby repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order that it is not germane to the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Let Rule 29 be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule 29 is:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

This is general legislation, in the opinion of the Chair, and therefore out of order.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. This amendment is reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That does not make any difference if it is general legislation. The amendment cannot be received under the rule.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, in gross?

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and adopted yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, the Chair will put the question on concurring in the other amendments together.

The amendments, with the exception stated, were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The excepted amendment will now be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 142, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted:

And the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall have power to use official envelopes, prepared by themselves, for all the official business of their respective offices; and the use of every such envelope for any purpose other than such official business shall be punished by the same penalties imposed by law for the illegal use of such envelopes already existing. And each member of the Senate and member of the House of Representatives and each Delegate from a Territory shall have the right to send through the mail any letter or packet containing only printed or written matter, not exceeding two ounces in weight, identified by his autograph signature, without the payment of postage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment just read.

Mr. PENDLETON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. FERRY. I understand the yeas and nays are to be called. I designed to express myself more fully on the question against concurrence by the Senate in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, but I notice that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] who moved the amendment is not in his seat; and therefore I do not feel myself justified in saying anything in his absence except to utter again my protest against concurrence in the amendment and to say that the abuses which existed under the old franking privilege will follow this amendment if it becomes law. On that account I am totally against it and shall vote against it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Michigan will take time enough to show us in detail how the abuses of which he speaks will apply under this amendment. I hope he will not refrain on account of the absence of the Senator from Vermont from giving us that explanation. I shall be very glad to know how those abuses can be carried on under this amendment.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator from Iowa desires me to say more, I will give him an illustration of the manner in which the abuse occurs. To-day was called to my attention a verification of what I had known before, that when the franking law was in force a member of Congress noticing a friend in want of a stamp offered his signature as a frank to the letter not only, but offered it for many others. I stated yesterday that that practice would be repeated under this amendment; that envelopes would be franked in gross, and be used no doubt in the main in a proper way, but many times, as was frequently done before, in an irregular way. It is not my intention to imply that any Senator would do so, for I do not believe it. No Senator nor member of the House would intentionally defraud the Government by this irregular use of the franking privilege; nor would our Secretary, nor would the Clerk of the House; but we know the fact of irregular use and abuse under the old franking privilege, and I believe like abuse will occur under the present proposition if the Senate concurs in the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The abuse was so great that the press of the country, I think with scarcely an exception, insisted on a repeal of the law granting this privilege. I have always been and continue to be desirous of continuing to newspapers substantially, though not in form, a franking privilege in sending through the mails newspapers at the nominal rate of two cents a pound and at a large outlay by the Government annually. The revenues of the Post-Office Department cannot well stand the strain of both low newspaper postage and the Congressional franking privilege proposed by the amendment.

It is far better to forego the convenience and saving that this proposed franking privilege would afford in order that the people of the country may enjoy freer newspapers.

If the Senator from Vermont was here I would comment further on the force of his amendment. It not only authorizes the Secretary of the Senate to transmit matter on official business, but it affixes a penalty upon other matter under existing law, and there is no law affixing a penalty upon such other matter applicable to that officer. The amendment also gives every member of this body and every member of the other House the unlimited right to send through the mails all printed and written matter, whether on official business or not. It therefore opens the door wide to the abuses that existed before. I am therefore totally opposed to it, and shall vote against it.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask for a division of the question under Rule 31. The proposition contains two very distinct items.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will decide on the division when the amendment is read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall have power to use official envelopes, prepared by themselves, for all the official business of their respective offices; and the use of every such envelope for any purpose other than such official business shall be punished by the same penalties imposed by law for the illegal use of such envelopes already existing.

Mr. GARLAND. That is one proposition, and then the other proposition in reference to Senators and Members is a distinct question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so decides.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask for a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first clause relative to the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, which has just been read.

Mr. FERRY. Have the yeas and nays been ordered on the first clause?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays will be taken on the first clause if the Senate desire.

Mr. FERRY. That, I understand, is confined entirely to the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives as to official matter. I have no objection to that. That correspondence is to be forwarded under the penalty envelope.

Mr. PENDLETON. That part of the amendment is all right.

Mr. FERRY. There is no law imposing a penalty for that. I will offer an amendment to the clause. Let it read "official penalty envelopes." I move to insert the word "penalty" before the word "envelopes."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first clause of the amendment of the Committee of the Whole as amended. The yeas and nays will not be taken on this clause unless they are specially called for.

The first clause of the amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the second clause of the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Let the clause be reported.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

And each member of the Senate and member of the House of Representatives and each Delegate from a Territory shall have the right to send through the mail any letter or packet containing only printed or written matter, not exceeding two ounces in weight, identified by his autograph signature, without the payment of postage.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I regard the free and open communication between the Senators and Members of Congress and their constituents as one of the most essential rights of the American people. I consider that there can be no proper discharge of official duty here by a Senator or Representative without his attending carefully to every request that may be made by his constituents which is consistent with the performance of his public duty.

There are a great many men who represent the States and the people by their choice who are not men of large means; there are many who perform these duties with great conscientiousness, and they are not able to do it on the salary that is now allowed them and bear the expense out of their own means of an extended correspondence. My own correspondence often costs from three to four dollars a week and sometimes very largely exceeds that amount.

Now the proposition is that there shall be a free communication in response to official requests on the part of the constituents between a Senator or Member of Congress and the people.

The Senator from Michigan says that the men who come here cannot be trusted with this right, that they will give it to other persons, that they will send communications which are not authorized by law. I reply to that that it is the duty of Congress to provide a law to punish such things, and it is their duty to make provision by which the law cannot be offended against, and it is not necessary to interpose a barrier in the way of a free and unrestricted communication between the constituent and the Senator in order to do that.

If it be necessary in the opinion of the Senator from Michigan, why shall it not be made an offense for which a Member of Congress may be expelled or a Senator lose the privilege of his seat here for an open violation of the law on this subject? I see no difficulty whatever, and I believe that it is an infraction of the rights of the people to say that there shall not be a free and an open and an easy access from them to those who represent them here; and for that reason, and in the interests of the people and of a proper and efficient answer to every letter that may be sent to members here by any of their constituency, I shall vote for this proposition.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JACKSON, (when Mr. GARLAND'S name was called.) The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] requested me to state that he is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] The Senator from Arkansas, if here, would vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.] If present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST.] Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I decline to vote; but I should vote "nay," if at liberty to do so.

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I was requested by my colleague to state that he is absent, paired. I have no idea how he would vote on this question, but he is absent, paired.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—41.

So the second clause of the amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, the amount allowed for mail facilities on the railroads has been increased by the Senate from $500,000 to $650,000 by one of the amendments. The intention, as I understand, of that increase was to distribute more equally and more fairly over the country the amount appropriated, so that cities that have now no benefit from this fund shall have some of the benefits. In looking over the list of how this amount of money is expended, I notice that probably more than one-half of it is expended on routes leaving New York City, while the cities of Baltimore and Washington, for instance, get not one cent, either for lines going to or coming from them. This is, in my judgment, an unfair distribution, and I believe and hope that in the distribution that will take place under the increased appropriation which we have made, the cities I have just named will be considered as they ought to be. This fact convinces me that it would be better to increase that amount to some extent. I make these remarks hoping that they may have some influence upon the action of the Post-Office Department in distributing the amount of money now appropriated. I think the cities I have named are justly entitled to some portion of this sum.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1992) for the relief of the savings-bank of Santa Rosa, California; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 4698) to create two additional land districts, and to change the boundaries of the Watertown land district, in the Territory of Dakota; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1514) appropriating $100,000 for continuing the work on Davis Island dam.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. No. 3208) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me until I call up several joint resolutions on the Calendar authorizing the Secretary of War to issue tents for the purpose of soldiers' reunions during the coming summer. It is important that these resolutions should be passed at once in order that the managers of these associations may know what they are to have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the tariff-commission bill. The Senator from Kansas asks to take up several bills in relation to the disposition of tents.

Mr. BAYARD. I call for the regular order. I hope the vote will be taken to-day on the tariff-commission bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is before the Senate. The bills the Senator from Kansas proposes to take up are not appropriation bills, and the Senator from Delaware has a right to object to their consideration, as he does.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not observe the Senator from Delaware in his seat at the time I spoke or I should have appealed to him then to allow these joint resolutions to be passed. They are of course necessarily formal, but at the same time it is very desirable that they should be passed at an early day. It will take but a few moments to pass them; there will be no discussion whatever.

Mr. BAYARD. After the regular order is disposed of, I think they can be taken up.

Mr. DAWES. I think the fortification bill will take but a very few minutes.

Mr. BAYARD. That I understand is an ordinary regular appropriation bill, and of course I yield to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the unfinished business will be laid aside informally until the fortification bill is considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3208) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I will detain the Senate but a moment, merely to state that the Committee on Appropriations have reported back this bill just as it came from the House. They have instructed me to move a very small amendment on a matter that came before the committee after the report was made. The act of last year appropriated $375,000. The estimates for this year were $1,220,000; and this bill contains appropriations for $375,000. I ask that it be read, and then I will offer the amendment agreed on by the committee.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I offer, as an additional section, an amendment which was prepared at the War Department, containing an appropriation of $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MORRILL in the chair.) The amendment will be reported.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized at his discretion to issue, on the requisition of the governor of a State bordering on the sea or gulf coast and having a permanent camping ground for the encampment of the militia not less than six days annually, two heavy guns and four mortars with carriages and platforms, if such can be spared, for the proper instruction and practice of the militia in heavy artillery drill, and for this purpose a suitable battery for these cannon will be constructed; and for said construction and the transportation of said cannon, &c., the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated for supplying each State that may so apply.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to strike out, in line 11, after the word "fortifications," the words "including heavy guns;" so as to read:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, &c.

I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what description of heavy guns it is that are to be manufactured and put upon trial or test under this appropriation of $100,000?

Mr. DAWES. I do not understand that it is the intention of the War Department to enter at this time into the manufacture of any heavy guns or to apply any part of this money to any such purpose as the manufacture of heavy guns. This item is included in the various kinds of defense to which this $100,000 is applied, for the purpose, if it becomes necessary, to move from one place to another the heavy guns, or to change in any respect their existing condition. That is all that I understood to be contemplated by this provision of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Massachusetts understand that the bill as it is worded would authorize the Secretary of War or the Ordnance Bureau to proceed with the conversion of what is called the Crispin gun?

Mr. DAWES. I am unable to answer that specific question. I am instructed, however, that they do not intend to proceed with even the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, except the reduction of the 10-inch to 8-inch, and to go on with that as they have during the last year. The gun that goes by the name which the Senator has used I am ignorant of, and I cannot answer more specifically. I understand that they are in process of changing a 10-inch smooth-bore gun into a smaller rifled gun, as they have been doing from time to time; and that out of this $100,000, which covers a variety of matters, it is contemplated to proceed, as heretofore, when it can be done without detriment to the service, with the conversion of those old smooth bores in that manner into rifled cannon.

Mr. MORGAN. In 1879 the Congress of the United States appropriated $125,000 under this form of appropriation, in the very words that we find in this bill:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, $125,000.

In 1880 $400,000 was appropriated under precisely the same language; and in 1881 $325,000 was appropriated in the same words precisely. This is the fourth effort under this same language to enable the Ordnance Bureau to proceed with the manufacture of heavy guns upon a pattern which has, as we are informed, totally failed. The Senator from Massachusetts evidently does not understand precisely how far the Ordnance Bureau intends to go in the application of this $100,000 of money. He thinks that they do not intend to do more than to reduce some 10-inch smooth bores to 8-inch rifle guns, I suppose by a lining inserted on the Crispin plan; but we have from year to year given money lavishly to that bureau, and, as we are informed through the public prints and as we are informed otherwise, they have expended it without any due reference to the welfare, I will say, of the country. The matter ought not to be allowed to go any further. This loose form of legislation, which we have now pursued in the same identical words for four years, ought at least to be restricted and restrained, so that hereafter there can be no abuse of these appropriations.

Some time ago I had the honor to introduce into the Senate a resolution calling for information from the Ordnance Bureau, or from the Secretary of War, in reference to the trials that have been made of the Crispin gun. We have succeeded in obtaining nothing, so far, in the way of official information as to the actual experiments that have been made. However, Mr. Hunt came out, the man who manufactured the guns, a member of the South Boston Iron Company, in an interview in the public prints and asserted that the tests which had been made of the Crispin gun that we are now manufacturing had proved that that gun was a failure. We have no other plan now for the manufacture of guns except to bore out the 10-inch guns and the 15-inch guns and reduce the caliber by the insertion of a steel wrought tube; and the experts on the subject, indeed the Government officers, say that in every one of these guns there is a line of weakness of one hundred yards in length where the coil comes together and is welded.

When this subject was up for discussion before the Senate, the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said:

There is in the appropriation bill pending before the Committee on Appropriations no appropriation for heavy ordnance. Pending this examination, under a law passed last year, no such appropriation will be made or thought of by the Senate; and the appropriation bill can be considered without reference to the vast amount of information sought by the Senator from Alabama.

The information that I sought was information in respect of the test of all guns of 8-inch caliber and larger in size, and especially information relating to the test of the Crispin gun, for which we have expended in one year nearly $425,000; at all events we put it in the power of the Secretary of War to expend that amount of money if he chose to do it upon the manufacture of the Crispin gun.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will permit me, I think, if he will look at the phraseology of the bill, he will see that it does not provide for the manufacture of any heavy guns. The phraseology is simply—

For the armanent of sea-coast fortifications.

Then it goes on to specify in what manner:

Including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, &c.

Further on:

Including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles.

I agree with the Senator about the Crispin gun and about the $400,000 that was appropriated in the last Congress for the manufacture of that gun. I certainly do not understand that there is the slightest idea, in the present condition of the service, of manufacturing any of those heavy guns. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment longer?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. There is a board, as he has said, now having charge of the examination of all these heavy guns, to ascertain which, if any of them, it is for the interest of the Government to manufacture. Although the Ordnance Bureau estimated for a large sum for the manufacture of these guns, the Secretary of War has stricken that all out, and the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses, coinciding with that conclusion, have wisely omitted to put in a dollar for that purpose. If the Senator thinks this phraseology in reference to the heavy guns is not specific enough, I have not the slightest objection to having it made more so; but I state distinctly that the understanding of the Department and of both committees is and the debate in the House shows that to be the intent of those who have inserted this phraseology in the bill. It seems to me to be wise to authorize the Department to perfect the armament with what material they have, even if it should include such heavy guns as they have on hand.

Mr. MORGAN. I have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have enacted now three acts in the identical words that are found in this bill, and under those enactments they have gone forward to convert heavy guns, guns of 10-inch caliber and 15-inch caliber, into what is called the Crispin gun. They reduce the bore by inserting a wrought-steel tube, and then convert the gun in other respects, by making it a breech-loader and using something similar to the Krupp system in the arrangement of that part of the machinery of the gun. Having now for three sessions of Congress made these appropriations, approximating $1,000,000, in the identical words that we find this bill couched in, what has the Department to do except what it has heretofore done, to proceed with the conversion of more of these guns upon the Crispin plan? Why is there any use of mentioning "heavy guns" in the twelfth line at all unless they are to be converted or else manufactured? Of course the money must be applied in the one way or the other, and it will be applied precisely as it has been heretofore.

When we come to look at the fact that there exist upon several of the parts of the Crispin gun patents in favor of officers of the Ordnance Department, I for one take alarm at it. I do not feel reconciled to allow money to be passed in the same channels and to produce nothing but failure in the manufacture of heavy ordnance. Why shall we do it? It is merely putting $200,000 ($100,000 for making rifles of smooth-bore guns and another $100,000 for the conversion of these guns upon the Crispin plan) into the hands of the Ordnance Bureau, and extending the invitation which we have already given them through three acts enacted by Congress in the very same words, that they shall proceed to throw away the money upon the ordnance officers of this Government in the manner they have been doing.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him in order to call his attention to line 12?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. This paragraph does not authorize the construction of any guns; it is not intended to do it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask the honorable Senator from Iowa a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator if this paragraph is not to be found in the same language in three preceding acts of appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MORGAN. And has it not authorized the Ordnance Bureau to produce these Crispin guns?

Mr. ALLISON. Not under this clause. This is a clause for the armament of guns; that is, for putting guns in place that are already constructed. If there is a heavy gun lying around loose somewhere, I can see no objection to putting it in place, if there is a place to put it. That is all that is provided for under this bill. Not a single gun can be constructed of heavy caliber. Nobody intends, as I understand it, that any gun shall be constructed under the bill. If the Senator from Alabama wishes to make it certain that no gun can be constructed under this clause, let him move to insert "provided that no gun shall be constructed." Guns cannot be constructed under it, clearly. The item is for the armament of fortifications.

Mr. MORGAN. That is precisely my purpose, that no gun shall be constructed, and that none shall be converted upon the Crispin plan.

Mr. ALLISON. When the Senator comes to the question of conversion, I am rather of the opinion that under this clause they could convert smooth-bore guns into rifles. Therefore, if he wants to prevent that, he will have to move to strike out a portion of lines 16 and 17.

Mr. MORGAN. It is no matter to me how it comes about, so the restriction is made to prevent the expenditure of any more money in that direction.

Mr. ALLISON. But I would say to the Senator that practically no guns will be converted under this appropriation, because this whole $100,000 will be required for the purposes named in the appropriation other than for the conversion of guns. So that it is just as well to leave that in or strike it out, according to my idea.

Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator from Alabama the phraseology under which the $400,000 was expended?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I have it here.

Mr. ALLISON. Just read it.

Mr. MORGAN. It reads as follows:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading rifles, $400,000.

Mr. DAWES. That is it. I was very confident that the word "manufacture" was in there.

Mr. MORGAN. That clause refers to the four guns costing $50,000 apiece.

Mr. DAWES. It was under that term which the Senator finds there but does not find here, that they expended the $400,000 in a way that it is not contemplated they will do this year. The very word has been left out of this bill which authorized the expenditure last year, and which does not authorize the expenditure this year.

Mr. MORGAN. What, then, is meant by the word "conversion" in the pending bill?

Mr. DAWES. I speak of the "manufacture" of heavy guns.

Mr. MORGAN. I know; but what is meant by these words:

Including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, $100,000.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt that under that term you can convert 10-inch smooth-bore cannon into rifles; but I understood the Senator to be apprehensive that because the words "heavy guns" were in the second line of the paragraph we could go to manufacturing heavy guns. I did not so understand it, and I said distinctly that nobody, so far as I was aware, had any such intention. Now, it appears that the Senator overlooked the operative word under which they did proceed to manufacture the guns which he says are a failure. The operative words there are not in here; the clause "and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading rifles" is not here. Aside from the manufacture of four heavy guns in that provision, just the same phraseology is used in the bill before us. The words were used as in this case:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns.

That was not enough to authorize the making of heavy guns. So that when they did anything to make heavy guns they added to that what the Senator has just been kind enough to read.

Mr. MORGAN. It may be true that the criticism of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] upon the language in the eleventh and twelfth lines is correct, that it means the mounting of guns, and is called the armament of guns. In such an event my amendment would be simply misplaced and would come in in the sixteenth and seventeenth lines, where the Senators both admit that the power is given to convert smooth-bore cannon into rifles, and that it may be done on the Crispin plan.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt of the power contained in those words.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well. I ask leave to withdraw my amendment; and now I move to add to the paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That no conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles upon the plan called the Crispin plan shall be made.

I want to stop that business.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to suggest to the Senator, why condemn any plan in advance of the finding of the board? Suppose the board should decide that the Crispin plan is an excellent one. Why not simply provide that this appropriation shall not be used for the conversion of smooth-bore into rifle guns? Then the Senator will accomplish all he proposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I got upon the floor of the Senate some time ago and I drew the attention of the Senate to the matter by certain resolutions calling for information, and I found myself at once in a considerable hornets' nest on this business. I found that there were a good many men looking around to see who was going to be hurt by it. My purpose has been all the time to bring to light the actual experiments which have been made with the Crispin gun, which Mr. Hunt, in an interview that has never been denied, stated to a correspondent of the New York Herald had proved that those guns were failures, that the Crispin plan, in other words, was a failure, and it would not do any longer to pursue it.

Mr. DAWES. Will not the Senator reach his object if he merely strikes out those words without putting in anything about one plan more than another? I do not know which plan it would be desirable to adopt. It is for the very purpose of ascertaining that fact that we have a board now in session.

Mr. MORGAN. We shall not know in the next five or ten years to come what plan to adopt if we go on in the way we have been going.

Mr. DAWES. I am content, with the Senator, to stop the change.

Mr. MORGAN. The real inventive genius of the country is stopped from all consideration by the Ordnance Bureau, and it has been so since the attempt was made to force these guns upon the country. We are getting an armament of sea-coast fortifications which is absolutely more dangerous to the men who work the guns than to the enemy.

Mr. ALLISON. But does not the Senator know that this board is compelled to allow every inventor to present his inventions to the board?

Mr. MORGAN. He can present his inventions merely to have them buried. They give him a very decent burial, and then they are done with him. They do not even say a ritual over him; he goes into the ground and they shut him up forever.

When the Senator from Iowa, after a long familiarity with this subject, and especially after the investigation which he himself conducted, when witnesses were examined before his committee a year ago, stated that there would be no such appropriation in this bill, I confess I was surprised at finding it here, but instead of $100,000, we have got $200,000. One hundred thousand dollars is set apart for the conversion of smooth-bore guns into rifle guns, without saying anything about the plan.

Mr. ALLISON. In this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to see that. I have misread the bill, if that is in it.

Mr. DAWES. It is $100,000 for all purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon; the Senator is right about that; I had misread the paragraph. We have $100,000 in this bill after the Senator from Iowa told us there would not be anything for heavy guns at all. The Senator was evidently convinced that this experiment ought to stop somewhere and that sufficient evidence had been brought to light to justify the Senate in refusing to vote any more money that might be applied in that direction.

So I think we all agree that it is time we should pause until we get some authentic information from the mixed commission who are examining guns now. It is time we should stop, and therefore I think it is proper and wise that we should put into the bill such an amendment as will prevent the War Department from turning this fund into the hands of those gentlemen who are now experimenting upon the Crispin gun and who are deriving annually a very high amount of profit out of it.

The truth is, our heavy ordnance is costing us about twice as much as it ought to do anyhow. If private enterprise were allowed to come in instead of the Government manufacturing this heavy ordnance, it would reduce the price at least 50 per cent. We shut out private enterprise; we shut out the genius of unofficial men in devising a system for our ordnance; and when shall we ever have any? It is stated now by prominent men in ordnance circles that even the steel Krupp gun is a failure, that it does not come up to the expectation of its inventor or of those boards that have tested it heretofore, especially in point of endurance in battle; that it wears out too quickly. That may be due to the fact that they have got missiles that are not of the proper construction. I am not prepared to say much about that, because I do not know much about it; I have only such information as I derive from intelligent and enlightened sources on this question; but the American people certainly have got as much inventive genius as any other people in the world, and if we would give half the money necessary to test inventions to inventors of this country who are willing to come forward and expend the other half themselves, I have no doubt in the world that in five years or ten years we should have the best system of armament to be found on any continent on the globe. Our success in every other department of invention and manufacture warrants me in that assertion, and in having a perfect confidence in such a result. So I am in favor of that. It is not right for us, after information has been withheld, for that is all of it, from the Senate of the United States, after it has been sought after, to put it in the power of the Ordnance Bureau to go further now in the manufacture of the Crispin gun.

I shall be content to have it said that none of this money shall be expended in that way. Four hundred thousand dollars has been expended. I do not know whether it has been all expended for this purpose or not, but the result is we have got eight guns, I believe, at a cost of $50,000 each.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall have.

Mr. MORGAN. All that remain unbroken and unburst after three or four trials we are to have. Some of them have collapsed on the third trial, guns costing from $50,000 to $60,000 apiece. That is the statement made, and I have no doubt of its being the truth; and here we are going on and putting it in the power of the Ordnance Bureau to spend another hundred thousand dollars, a large part of it at least, in this wasteful way.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment I have offered as a proviso to the paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word in response to the Senator from Alabama. I remember perfectly well the discussion we had, a month since perhaps, with reference to his resolution. I then stated that the present fortification bill had nothing in it for the manufacture of heavy ordnance. It is quite possible that I stated also—although I have no distinct recollection of that, the RECORD will show—that there was nothing in it for the conversion of smooth-bore guns into rifle-guns. If I did so state, I stated what is probably true. There is a paragraph of the bill covering a large number of items, and the total amount appropriated is $100,000; but the necessary expenditures under this appropriation, without including the conversion of smooth-bore guns into rifle-guns, will amount to $100,000; so that practically there is nothing in the bill which can be expended for the conversion of smooth-bore guns. Therefore I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, who has the bill in charge, has over and over again offered to the Senator from Alabama that he would consent to the striking out of the words in lines 17 and 18.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not so understand the Senator. That is all I desire.

Mr. ALLISON. I have so said to him once or twice, and I repeat that it is not, and was not, the purpose of the committee to go on converting the smooth-bore guns.

Mr. MORGAN. I am entirely content with the amendment suggested; striking out those words will have the same effect precisely.

Mr. DAWES. I suggested to the Senator a little while ago—he did not understand me——

Mr. MORGAN. No, I did not.

Mr. DAWES. To strike out these words.

Mr. MORGAN. The striking out of the words "including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles" would satisfy me.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to say a word or two more in reference to the four guns formerly authorized to be constructed. They did cost fifty or sixty thousand dollars apiece, but not one of those, so far as I know, has been tested. So far from any of them having been in any way found deficient, not one of them has been in any way tested.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand they have been.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has information that I am not in possession of. The first one was only completed last August. It may be that it has been tested in some way, but I am not aware of the fact. The Committee on Appropriations last year intended to cure the very evils that the Senator from Alabama has waked up to this year. We went over the very questions that are now fresh and new to him; we took a large amount of testimony; and we provided a careful statute, as we supposed, for an independent and impartial board of officers, not a board of ordnance officers, but a board consisting of two artillery officers and one engineer officer, as well as ordnance officers, so that a majority of the board is not connected in any way with the Ordnance Bureau. We also provided in that law that any man who had a useful invention with reference to heavy ordnance could go before the board and have his invention tested and tried there. I submit to the Senator that his criticisms upon the recent legislation on this subject are not quite what they ought to be.

However, I do not wish to prolong the discussion; I am quite willing to have the amendment suggested adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I withdraw the other amendment I have offered, and move to strike out the words, in lines 16 and 17, "including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth lines, which are a mere memorandum and no part of the bill. After line 27, I move to strike out the words "the total sum appropriated by this bill is $375,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TENTS, ETC., FOR SOLDIERS' ENCAMPMENTS.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the tariff-commission bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Delaware again if he will not yield until I can secure the passage of some joint resolutions granting tents, &c., to certain associations who desire to hold encampments during the coming summer?

Mr. BAYARD. I consent to have the regular order laid aside informally for that purpose.

Mr. PLUMB. There are four of them, to be found on page 21 of the Calendar.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 37) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply artillery and camp equipage to the soldiers and sailors' reunion at Topeka, Kansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 42) granting to the State of Indiana the use of tents on the occasion of an encampment of State troops to be held in said State during the year 1882 was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Grand Island, Nebraska, in the month of August, 1882, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 132) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of the department of Pennsylvania, on the battle-field of Gettysburgh, in July, 1882, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 266) for the relief of George W. Wicks & Co., of Louisville, Kentucky; and

An act (S. No. 743) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

INTEROCEANIC ISTHMIAN COMMUNICATION.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish for the use of the Senate such information as has been collected by the Bureau of Navigation relating to the problem of interoceanic communication by the American Isthmus.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (S. No. 308) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the most accessible point within five miles above the city of Saint Charles, Missouri; and

A bill (S. No. 650) to authorize the Secretary of War to release a right of way across lands of the United States at Plattsburgh, New York.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3547) authorizing Samuel W. Dabney, United States Consul at Fayal, to accept a gold medal from the French Republic, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, covering the action of the Osage Indians declining to accede to the terms of the act of March 3, 1881, reducing the price of their lands in Kansas.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 17, 1882.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1992) for the relief of the Savings-Bank of Santa Rosa, California, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 3547) authorizing Samuel W. Dabney, United States consul at Fayal, to accept a gold medal from the French Republic, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TARIFF AND TAX COMMISSION.

Mr. BAYARD. Now I call up the tariff-commission bill, which is the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 22) to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of the tariff and internal-revenue laws.

Mr. GARLAND. I had the floor upon the pending bill when it was last under consideration, but I have agreed to defer to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] who wishes to address the Senate on the question.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I shall not delay a vote on this measure, which I know its friends are anxious to have as soon as possible; what I have to say relates more to the general subject than to the methods of gathering information—more to the general principles which should govern our conclusions than to the special provisions of the bill, which should be passed. The action taken elsewhere—as by our rules I must so express myself when alluding to the House of Representatives—leads me to believe that we shall best accomplish the purpose of a speedy and satisfactory reform of the tariff, which every Senator professes to desire, if the committees of Congress shall at once address themselves to the preparation of the bill.

The real difficulties of the tariff question, as a matter of practical legislation, arise out of the vast and complicated details necessary to be adjusted. The articles imported are so numerous, their classification so difficult, their uses so varied, the proper relation of duty on raw material and on the manufactured article, the gradations of amount when duties are levied on an ad valorem or a specific basis, the point where revenue fails and exclusion begins—these and very many more such details make up the real difficulty of the tariff question.

If it were possible to reduce the issue purely and simply to absolute free trade on the one side and absolute protection on the other, if we should discard altogether the idea of a tariff for revenue, there would be no necessity for considering these details, and much of the difficulty would disappear.

On such an issue I think it would not be difficult to show that the simple rule which every man applies in his ordinary and private transactions, "to buy where he can buy cheapest and sell where he can sell dearest," would be an equally wise tenet of economic philosophy when applied to the whole people. I think it would be easy to show that a tariff for protection only, does not differ in essence from the grant of a bounty to the producer of the protected article. Bounties are paid out of the Treasury, and the Treasury is supplied by taxes levied on all the people. A tariff for protection enables the protected producer to charge all his customers a larger price than if he competed with the foreign article. If a constitutional argument exists against the grant of public money as bounties for the benefit of individuals who produce certain articles, the same argument exists against a tariff for protection only. If the whole body of the people may not be taxed in order that the money collected may be given, under the name of bounty, to some who are pursuing special industries for private gains, so also the whole people may not be compelled by legislation in any way, however indirect, to pay a larger price to the same persons for the products of those industries. If every article and every industry should be protected, and every person be made to pay a larger price for every article he consumes, the extra price he pays for everything except his own product would be fully equal to any advantage he might derive from the protection afforded him. If any person has a right to demand that his production or industry shall be protected, every person has the same right to a relatively equal protection. I will not elaborate the argument. As between free trade and a tariff solely for protection, without reference to revenue at all, the argument, on the score of principle, constitutional law, and beneficial results, is clearly in favor of freedom of trade.

And the argument maintains much of its strength when applied as between a tariff for revenue only and a tariff for protection only.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has gone further than any modern political economist whom I remember. He declared that he is a protectionist from principle; that if there were no public debt, no interest to pay, no pension list, no army and no navy to support, (I use his words,) he would still oppose free trade and its twin sister tariff for revenue only, and favor protective duties. I think he has no large following in the Senate. As far as I have observed, he has no large following in the country.

I will not argue that question. Such an issue cannot arise under our present conditions. The Federal Government needs large revenue. It has raised its revenue, much of the time entirely, always in great part, from tariff duties. Until we shall abandon this system and rely on internal taxation for the supply of the Federal Treasury we must have a tariff for revenue.

We can neither indulge in absolute protection, and thus have no revenue from duties, nor in absolute free trade, and thus have no revenue from duties. We must have a tariff for revenue, and we ought to so grade it as, while raising sufficient revenue, to impose the least burden and do the least harm to every interest involved.

As I have said, the adjustment of details constitutes the real difficulty. The largest attainable revenue with the least burden is the rule which should be adopted; and the free-list, rates, classifications, should be regulated accordingly. This requires vast and varied and accurate knowledge of all the different interests, all the numerous raw materials, all the manufactured articles, all the products of our soil and industry, all the necessities of agricultural development, all the just claims of our labor, of all the productions and the legislation of the countries with which we deal, and the most faithful and painstaking application of that knowledge.

The far-reaching effect of tariff duties is not always apparent. For instance, the dairy products of our country are very large. They probably exceed those of all the world. They can be produced cheaper; but there is a duty on sugar, and a duty of 35 per cent. on tin, out of which the proper cans are made. This duty on tin prevents our dairymen from having the monopoly of the trade of the world in preserved milk, and prevents the preservation of fruits and vegetables, which constitute so large a portion of the waste of every farm in the land.

To get some idea of the magnitude of the interests involved, remember that in 1880 the amount invested in the mills and other conveniences for cotton manufactures was $225,000,000; the value of woolens manufactured was $234,000,000; of silk manufactures, $34,000,000; of shoe and leather industry, $86,000,000; the products of iron and steel work, 7,000,000 tons. Remember, also, that in the same year the product of cotton was more than 6,000,000 bales; of Indian corn, more than 1,754,000,000 bushels; of wheat, 450,000,000 bushels; of oats, 400,000,000; of tobacco, more than 262,000,000 pounds. The cattle export was $14,000,000; corn export, $50,000,000; wheat export, $190,000,000; flour export, $45,000,000; cotton, $245,000,000; lard, $30,000,000; beef, $12,000,000; pork, $8,000,000. The aggregate annual product of agricultural, manufacturing, and mechanical industry reaches $7,000,000,000. Imagination falters under such vast amounts. I have them from the Commissioner of Agriculture. The report from the Bureau of Statistics for the year 1881 shows that the value of articles imported for consumption reached $650,000,000, and that the duties reached $193,000,000.

The merchandise entering the city of New York alone comes from all quarters of the globe and is of indescribable variety, quality, and value. It averages more than $500,000,000 a year, more than a million and a quarter a day. There are thirteen schedules of rates, enumerating duties on more than 1,500 different articles, to which about 1,000 other miscellaneous articles are to be added, making in all about 2,500 separate articles on which duties are to be assessed and collected, and beyond these scheduled duties there are 823 articles which pay ad valorem duties, 541 which pay specific rates, and 144 which are subject to compound rates.

These statistics convey some idea of the vastness of the interests with which our tariff laws deal. They must be so adjusted that while no injustice shall be done to these various and immense interests in their relation to each other at home, hostile and retaliatory legislation shall not be provoked in the countries whose products we tax. The mind can scarcely grasp the enormous production of our country, when 100,000,000 of active enterprising people shall employ their brain and their industry in the development of its agricultural, mineral, and mechanical resources. It will far exceed the demands of a home market. Our tariff law must not destroy the foreign market, or even greatly impair it. If we shut our markets to the products of other nations, they will certainly shut their markets to us, and generally in the same proportion. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap again." It is often and loudly asserted that we can repress or even forbid the importation of foreign products, and retain unimpaired entrance for our products into other countries. The claim is unfounded. Reason and experience alike refute it. Human nature rebels against it. The necessity of the sale of the fruits of labor makes it impossible. I know of nothing which more jealously insists on the enforcement of the golden rule "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them."

The friends of extreme protection assert that their system produces at once high wages to workmen and cheap prices for commodities. This is a paradox. It is without reason on its face. It has nothing to support it. The result cannot be cheap if the elements are all dear. Labor enters largely into the cost of all manufactures. If the wages of labor are high the products of such labor cannot be cheap. If the products are cheap the labor must be cheap also. I despise the words "cheap labor." They mean wages low, luxuries none, comforts none; home, house, food, clothing, education, scant, and growing less; the heart, courage, high hope of the laborer faint and falling; his family suffering. They mean penury, misery, failing health, failing strength, feebleness, and, finally, vice and disregard of social and moral obligation.

But labor is cheap, not only by reason of what it receives, but by the price it must pay for all that the laborer ought to have. If the necessaries and comforts of his life are costly beyond their due proportion to his wages, then his labor is cheap and its rewards are scant.

I never knew ardent advocates for protection who worried themselves to protect labor. They go on the principle that the Government should take care of the rich, and the rich will take care of the poor. They protect the pocket of the manufacturer. I never heard that they require the manufacturer to divide the contents of his pocket-book with his employés. Every addition to the price of home products or necessaries of life falls first and most heavily on labor, and the very essence of protection is an increase of price on the article protected. We have lately heard that capital is very helpless and timid. I suppose that we shall soon be told that labor is very bold and aggressive.

The American consul at Barmen, in his report dated October 28, 1881, gives the following comparative statement of the prices of the necessaries of life in Germany, showing that the prices of almost every article for family use have increased since the adoption of the new German tariff laws. The prices are given in marks and pfennigs per kilogram:

Articles.	May, 1879.	May, 1881.	Increase.
Butter	220	240	20
Wheat flour	32	36	4
Petroleum	29	24	5
Bacon, Westphalia	130	160	30
Bacon, American	100	120	20
Lard	90	130	40
Rye bread	14	20	6
Mixed bread	20	27	7

He says:

It will be seen by the foregoing table that the increase of the price on petroleum, lard, and bacon is very considerable, just in those articles on which high import duties have been laid, and also in bread, owing to the import duty on flour. Sugar and potatoes have not been affected, as the duties on sugar remain unchanged, and potatoes enter free of duty. Most of the bacon, and especially of lard, was imported from the United States.

What is true in Germany as to the effect of a high tariff cannot be false in the United States.

A wise tariff system must note the power and the opportunity of retaliatory legislation by foreign nations. Our immense production of breadstuffs and the paucity of production abroad, so that many countries do not support their own population, make it very necessary that prohibitory or even repressive legislation should not be invited against us. And it will equally note the fact that, in some cases, just in proportion as our import duties are diminished, export duties are levied in the home countries. In some countries "beyond the Cape of Good Hope," as they were then called, and as to some articles, as our import duties are decreased their export duties are laid, and if there be competition our products are deprived of protection as the Government is deprived of revenue.

The present tariff ought to be amended at once. It is irregular, unjust, unfairly laid. It is intricate, uncertain, vexatious, and greatly too high. I shall not enter into details. I shall not specify the changes which ought to be made. That discussion would lead too far to-day. I reserve it till we shall have a bill before us, and consider and compare its provisions. It is enough now to indicate the general principles on which such changes shou'd be made. I have shown that the work of this reformation is one of great difficulty. Nevertheless, it ought to be commenced at once. It could be accomplished even yet before our adjournment. Our first duty is to reduce this enormous taxation. Our next duty is to replace this system with another, juster, better, more consistent with itself. At best we shall have to move deliberately. Time must be taken to determine the changes which should be made, and still further time to allow the various interests to adjust themselves to the proposed changes. The wrongs of the present tariff are very great, but sudden, unexpected changes might create greater evils than the wrongs themselves. Our purpose should be to unfetter trade, not to cripple any interest by abrupt, ill-timed changes in its conditions.

If I had the power I would vote to instruct the Committee of Ways and Means of the House to report a bill. I am sure we have members of the Committee on Finance in the Senate who could perfect it as well as any experts in the country whose services we are likely to get.

The wonderful developments of physical science have changed the face of the world, the relation of peoples, and the duties of statesmanship. The steam-engine, the postal system, the telegraph, have brought the world closer together; they have facilitated communication; they have developed the interchange not only of thought and sentiment but of productions also. Commerce has become not only the means, but to great extent the aim of international intercourse. Its demands carry our productions to every country in the world, and require that the sails of our ships should whiten every sea. It tempts our citizens to brave every clime and enter every jurisdiction. We should protect them there. It has awakened into new life the countries of the American continent, and stimulated passions which, after war and possible conquest, will exhaust themselves in marvelous industrial activity. Our diplomacy should invite their confidence in us as their friend, at once powerful and disinterested. Our commercial regulations should command their trade, by a reciprocity of benefits.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] is not ready to go on to-night, and therefore I will occupy a short time of the Senate upon the subject once more.

Mr. President, if this bill should become a law, I have no doubt the President would feel it to be his high duty to appoint men of character and of special fitness to discharge the duties confided to them, which after all are merely ministerial duties, and such men as the Senate would gladly confirm. If any other kind were nominated the Senate could and would reject them. They are expected to gather and report facts. We do not ask for mere opinions, the screeds of hacks, nor for arguments. We ask for no form of any bill. The House and Senate will not lose any power or freedom to originate and pass upon any tariff measure which they now possess, but they will be enriched by numberless facts, by fuller practical details of the interests of all parts of our country, and by the testimony of men engaged in all branches of industry. Surely no valid reason can be urged against the proposal now made of, Let there be light.

If, as I should hope there would be, three men were selected from the East, three from the West, and three from the South, fairly representing all interests and all sections of the country, I should have no doubt that they would bring to us contributions of great and permanent value, and such as would be received here by all parties with a hearty welcome. The charge flippantly made that the President would make up a party-packed commission I feel authorized to denounce as an unfounded slander.

This is not a party measure, but a measure in the interest solely of intelligent and thorough action. It is not a measure designed to establish high and extravagant protective rates of a tariff, but it is intended to secure by a careful revision a measure that will be approved throughout the country by the judgment of fair-minded men of all parties, and also, while securing an adequate revenue, secure some just claim to permanence. Frequent changes in tariff laws are no less deplored by importers than by manufacturers. It is stability perhaps more than anything else that is wanted and that is needed.

If any delay has occurred or shall occur in curing any alleged defects of the existing tariff, it must be charged to the persistent obstructions thrown in the way by some of those who are loudest in their proclamations of such defects.

I would willingly stop here without another word if consent for a vote could be had; but as that is unlikely to be had to-day, may I not venture again into the field so far as to learn whether or not the great guns on the other side of the Chamber, pointed in this direction, have not done more harm at the breech than at the muzzle? Permit me also to add that I have nothing to take back and nothing to repeat. If I should pick up and return some of the spent balls which started out with some noise from the free-trade marksmen of the other side of the Chamber, it should be remembered that I am not responsible for their light weight.

The speech delivered by the Senator from Kentucky January 10 perhaps would have justified more extended comments than were bestowed upon it at the time, but I have felt almost all the time since that a vote upon the pending bill would be more useful than any further debate however pertinent. In the debate upon the part of the Senator on Friday last, the Senator as usual reiterates the hot-footed and much-fatigued adjectives with which he daily slaughters the existing tariff, which strange to say still lives, and unless he should receive some further attention I greatly fear he may become discouraged and drop the tariff as a political issue, that fountain with which he so often floods the Senate with eloquence, and then much of Othello's occupation would be gone. It is not to be expected, however, that the Senator's crusade will cease so long as he believes the tariff to be the only real red rag equal to exciting his followers to a vigorous party contest.

Notwithstanding the inertness and self-acknowledged incompetence of the House of Representatives, when controlled for six years by a Democratic majority, to deal with the tariff question, the Senator from Kentucky, having great confidence in the present Republican House to deal with this complex subject, now asks, without any preparation, for their instant action. He will not wait a moment nor ask anybody's advice, but announces ex cathedra, as the legate of Democratic infallibility, his bull of excommunication against Democrats who dare to differ with him in opinion. Let the recusants who refuse to conform hear and tremble! I will give the exact terms he offers. The Senator said:

> I propose—
> Mark, it is I propose—
> if this Republican Congress does not give relief, to call upon the people to send men here who will; and if the Democratic House of Representatives did not give the relief that ought to have been given—and it is perhaps for that reason that they are in the minority now—if the Democrats, or those who call themselves Democrats, are opposed to a tariff for revenue and are in favor of imposing a tariff for protection, regardless of revenue, then I hope the people will keep them at home and send other men who will look to the revenues of the country, and not to enrich a few at the expense of all, and thus perform their constitutional duty.

In spite of all the virtues in a trio of ifs, this pronunciamento loudly thunders against some of "those who call themselves Democrats," and demands that the people shall keep them at home. The conclusion may be good, but the reasons are bad. Republicans will not object to the keeping at home of all those who call themselves Democrats, but it would seem a pity to ostracise them for the reason that they happen to have one sound principle. The job the Senator from Kentucky proposes to himself, I think, will be likely to call for all of his time, and his aggressive war in the camp of his own party will lighten the labors of the Republican party in future campaigns; but, from the example of John Kelly, I would most kindly warn the Senator that if the difficulties of the boss of Tammany Hall are great, those of the boss of Democratic members of Congress will be greater. Some of them may regard it as a bovine invasion of their china shops. As President Lincoln used to say about putting down the rebellion, "it is a big job;" and I am reminded of an incident in the storm at Sidmouth, related long ago in a speech by Sidney Smith, as follows:

> In the midst of this sublime storm, Dame Partington, who lived upon the beach, was seen at the door of her house, with mop and pattens, pushing away the Atlantic Ocean. The Atlantic was roused. Mrs. Partington's spirit was up. But I need not tell you that the contest was unequal. The Atlantic Ocean beat Mrs. Partington. She was excellent at a slop or a puddle, but she should not have meddled with a tempest.

When the Senator from Kentucky hears from Connecticut, from Indiana, from New Jersey, and from Pennsylvania, and from many other States, he may wish that he had confined his ambition where he, too, is excellent, and had not "meddled with a tempest."

Mr. President, I am anxious, as I have already observed, for an early vote upon the bill now before the Senate, and would prefer that to consuming any further time in debate, even should it be necessary to forego the small luxury of making any rejoinder to the speech of the senior Senator from Kentucky, who referred to my name, not in very flattering terms to be sure, for as I listened to him I almost wondered how I was out of the penitentiary, in nearly every paragraph of twenty-four broad columns of the RECORD. I was indebted to the Senator, however, for largely advertising my speech, as these references to it appear to have created something of a demand for it in Kentucky wherever he has circulated his own. If the Senator's elaborate speech was concocted and compounded as an antidote, it is very plain to me that many Kentuckians prefer the original poison. I willingly concede that the industrious Senator from Kentucky, in debate, is not a foe to be slighted, as it might be inferred was intended, if his voluminous and studied effort as well as his frequent and less studied efforts were to pass wholly unnoticed. If I am today very brief, and merely comment upon a few of the many familiar and over-confident positions of the distinguished Senator, it must not be supposed that all of his unanswered so-called arguments are clad in invulnerable armor, or that they would be less easily assailed and refuted. The fact is, most of them were long ago refuted.

The Senator must pardon me if I say, whenever he touches the tariff, that he seems to shake with the rage of Thersites scolding at everything done in the camp of the Greeks, and I venture to think he may have slandered the memory of Henry Clay, the Achilles of the American system of protection, by intimating if he were present now that he would go back upon the whole doctrine of protection.

Mr. President, Mr. Clay was a gallant leader of men, and no industry of free-trade scribblers would ever have caused him to turn his back upon the policy which he from his early manhood had proclaimed as vital to a great and prosperous career of our whole country. Unlike the present Senator from Kentucky, he would not have tendered as his sole incidental encouragement to southern manufacturers the suicidal subsidy of free machinery—putting a penny into the lap of protection and taking a shilling out—and thereby crushing out all the rich promise of southern genius in the line of invention, as well as of the adaptation of the mechanic arts to their own people and their own productions.

Mr. Clay never sought to build up one section at the expense of another; nor to build up one industry on the ruins of another. Mankind owe to machinery many of its comforts and exemption from much of its toil. No class is under greater obligations to machinery than farmers. By it, with the same labor, the acreage of land that may be cultivated has been possibly quadrupled, and all articles of manufactures consumed have been not only improved but wondrously multiplied and cheapened. India and China have little machinery, Africa has no machinery. When America shall turn the cold shoulder upon machinery and machine-shops and depend for its supply from abroad for brain-power, it will have done much to bring us down to the practical helplessness of the Mongolian and African races in their native habitats, and to stamp out the spirit of progress and the mainspring of success in all the diversified branches of American industry.

The Senator does not seem to be aware that a new era has dawned upon his own section of the country, and that the brain power of his own people has enlisted in the race as potential auxiliaries in aid of the great and expanding industrial forces of the country. They really have a considerable and most important stake now in home-made machinery, and with their natural alertness are destined soon to have an immensely greater one. The very remarkable increase of inventions for which patents have been issued to citizens of the former slaveholding States for the last decade, in comparison with the previous ten years, is especially noteworthy, and something to which their people may point with commendable pride. From 1871 to 1880, inclusive, Kentucky had granted to her citizens 750 per cent. more patents than in the ten years from 1851 to 1860, and Tennessee and Texas a still larger gain, while in the whole fifteen States the increase has been about 650 per cent. I give the facts as I have obtained them from the Patent Office in a tabulated form:

States.	1851 to 1860.	1871 to 1880.
Alabama	122	438
Arkansas	19	238
Delaware	52	360
Florida	19	108
Georgia	202	699
Kentucky	192	1,436
Louisiana	209	833
Maryland	423	2,246
Mississippi	117	471
Missouri	270	3,178
North Carolina	72	473
South Carolina	71	336
Tennessee	103	1,012
Texas	69	1,107
Virginia	304	1,026
West Virginia		471
Totals	2,244	14,440

There are large stores of iron ore and coal in the South, and many furnaces in Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and other Southern States, and wherever these exist, sending forth their clouds by day and pillars of fire by night, there will be the talismanic power to start in due time the indispensable workshops for the manufacture of machinery. The peculiar wants of the people will here first be known and supplied. Original equipment is important, but in the long run far less important than subsequent changes, additions, and the constantly recurring repairs. It would be gross injustice to existing establishments to give to prospective establishments any advantage, if there were any to give, as to machinery The 25 woolen mills and 79 cotton factories in Georgia, the 49 mills and 49 factories in Tennessee, the 107 woolen mills in Missouri and 97 cotton factories in North Carolina, and the 49 woolen mills in West Virginia, as well as many more of wool, cotton, silk, and hemp in other Southern States, as pioneers are rather more worthy of the highest consideration than any newcomers can be.

Not more necessary are schoolmasters to schools than are machine-shops to manufactures. They are the very apple of the eye to skilled workingmen. For Americans to depend upon foreigners in time of peace for machinery for American use would be as preposterous as to depend upon Turkey or Spain in time of war for guns and rifles. Northern capital to the amount of millions of dollars is waiting to be treated with some assured hospitality in southern homes by southern statesmen, to live and to let live, but it will not be invited by free machinery, nor will it go if whatever is left behind must be offered up as a concurrent sacrifice.

Among the arguments upon the tariff and free trade the fact that all industries are better rewarded here under a protective tariff, and that our people have more and greater opportunities to acquire a competence and a higher position in society among intelligent men than under free trade in Great Britain, strangely appears to be contested by the Senator from Kentucky, who insists that lower wages there are more than compensated by lower cost of living. This beyond all doubt is a serious mistake as to nineteen points out of twenty, including the cost of bread and meat, tea and coffee, and is conclusively disproved by the millions here, contrasted with the very few there, who are the absolute proprietors of farms upon which they live, and also disproved by the wide contrast in the character of the dwellings respectively occupied by laboring-men. The Senator seemed to exult in asserting the superiority of Great Britain and landed without stint her power, her gallantry, her prowess, her increase of population, her well-fed and well-paid operatives—all as the crowning result of free trade.

Now, sir, it appears to be necessary forthwith to show that the Senator is wholly mistaken, or we may lose all of our English, Scotch, and Irish fellow-citizens. If they cannot be satisfied that his statements are comparatively worthless or absurdly wrong, it is to be feared the logic of his argument may compel some hitherto contented millions to return to their original allegiance under Queen Victoria, including three of our fellow-Senators, all of whom we so highly esteem and whose presence, as I think, decorates American institutions. Against the testimony of the Senator from Kentucky, obviously under the duress of party bondage, I am quite willing to bring that of all the many thousands who come here from Great Britain and who have for the past twenty years lived here under a protective tariff, and let them say whether or not they have not increased their basket and store and vastly improved their condition in life, in all the elements of prosperity and elevation among men, since renouncing allegiance to the boasted land of free trade.

In the speech made by me in the early part of the session I had stated that—

> The Southern States, in the production of cotton, have possibly already reached the maximum quantity that can be cultivated with greatest profit, unless the demand of the world expands. A short crop now often brings producers a larger sum than a full crop. The amount of the surplus sent abroad determines the price of the whole crop. Production appears likely soon to outrun the demand. Texas alone has latent power to overstock the world.

This statement the Senator denounced as "grotesque" and "almost absurd," and said that he might be "intensely stupid" but that he could not appreciate such an argument.

An examination of the quantity and value of the exports of cotton in different years will disclose the fact that very large crops almost invariably brought to the producers less returns than more moderate crops. If the Senator from Kentucky had carefully read his British leader, Adam Smith, he would have learned that such a result was claimed by him to be almost the universal law, or that the rental of ten stores where only nine were wanted would be no greater than that of nine.

Exports of cotton.

Year.	Quantity.	Value.
	Pounds.	Dollars.
1867	662, 733, 679	201, 470, 423
1868	785, 415, 226	152, 820, 733
1870	958, 785, 304	227, 027, 624
1871	1, 463, 704, 507	218, 327, 109
1873	1, 200, 398, 178	227, 243, 069
1877	1, 445, 647, 079	171, 118, 508
1879	1, 628, 875, 979	162, 304, 250

From this table it will be seen that the increase of the exports in 1868 over that of 1867, to the amount of 123,000,000 pounds, brought nearly $50,000,000 less, and that the increase in 1871 over 1870 by 50 per cent., or over 500,000,000 pounds, brought less by $9,000,000; and so on to the end of the chapter. These facts may be grotesque, but I hope they are not intensely stupid.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me, as I only want to speak a very short time. He can put any question when I get through.

Mr. BECK. I only desired to remark on the grotesque suggestion; but I can do so hereafter.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been repeatedly denied that the wages of workmen had made any advances under protection, but that it was capital alone that had derived any advantage. This fact has been conclusively set at rest by the census report, by which it will be seen, although the increase of the number of females employed in cotton-factories was in a much larger ratio than that of males, yet the increase of yearly wages amounted to 22 per cent., and, with the same conditions, the yearly wages of men and women employed in woolen manufactories had advanced 42 per cent. These facts should forever silence the charge that labor has received no protection. If the computation could be made upon each class separately the advance would seem to be very much more.

Suppose that it were possible to bring about a radical change of the tariff laws and to base them wholly upon the idea of revenue only, with no leaning even to incidental protection. Not only would the American standard of wages approximate to the European and Asiatic standard and our large manufacturing population suffer by being thrown out of employment, but it would soon be found that agriculture, with its unwillingly added numbers, cannot thrive by exchanging home patrons for those abroad. That is the insidious form of the absenteeism of landlords from all home expenditure, and by no means the least deleterious. A sudden depreciation of agricultural products must follow, and also such a fall in the value of real estate as would be likely to effect a permanent cure of free-trade fanaticism for generations to come.

The first aim of such a change would be to copy the British example and levy an extraordinary tax on the articles we do not, perhaps cannot, produce, such as tea and coffee, and thus force the laboring households to contribute as much to the support of the Government as "the upper ten thousand" households. The second aim would be to reduce the rates of the tariff to the point where foreign importations must supply the major part of manufactures required for our consumption, and thus to give employment to men anywhere else in the world rather than to our own citizens. The third aim would be to supply the deficiencies of the tariff by an addition to the internal-revenue taxes of from 200 to 400 per cent. This is the only chartered highway of the free trade which we shall be asked to copy, and it should be understood from the start. It is an effort that can have no other ending but that of reducing the wages of workingmen and at the same time increasing their taxes.

Let me say that it was a matter of profound regret to me to find the distinguished Senator from Kentucky zealously attempting to make the tariff a political party question. Not that I should as a partisan dread such an issue, but ought it so to be? Is it not rather one of those great questions of wide and universal concernment to the welfare and advancement of our people which ought to be lifted above all parties? When a man has learned a life trade, or has risked his whole estate in any mechanical or manufacturing enterprise, shall all hope of stability vanish? Must he stand on a whirligig, ready to be a mechanic, an artisan, to-day, and perhaps a preacher without a church to-morrow? Shall it come to this, in the vicissitudes of parties, when one party rises that the tariff is to go down, and when another party rises that the tariff is to go up? The tariff commission is urged by me only because the public welfare requires the next revision of the tariff should be so thorough and satisfactory as to deserve and win the character of stability.

I may be permitted to doubt, when the Senator from Kentucky calls the muster-roll of Democrats on the issue he presents with so much sweetness of manner, whether he will not, as heretofore, obtain a very discordant and laggard response. Many of the plumed knights of Democracy will not enlist under his free-trade banner, and the yeomanry of the country, in larger battalions than ever heretofore, will cling to the old flag of Madison, Monroe, and Jackson; not a banner with any foreign device, but the banner of American Independence, and the banner which leads to the full and steady employment of all our people.

The Senator reproduced and roundly indorsed the Democratic platform of 1876. I do not want to make a party speech, but I may venture to predict that the Democratic platform of 1884 will bear no relationship, not even that of second-cousinship, to that of 1876. The Democratic party always obtains a divorce from its last national tariff platform at the earliest moment practicable, and no court ever denies its suit, as there is always overwhelming proof of both general and personal willful refusal to support the platform.

On such a doleful subject as Democratic platforms, which ever read so like Democratic epitaphs, marking the exit of those who loved, but not wisely, I propose to speak by the book, basing my arguments upon recorded facts, leaving to those whose cause may seem to require it the exclusive monopoly in the manufacture of facts, and therefore I will venture to refresh the memories of Senators by giving line upon line and precept upon precept of the gospel of the tariff as handed down to us in national Democratic platforms. The Senator from Kentucky is but a tyro either in the Democratic party or in this branch of standard literature; and before he set himself up as the tariff instructor, the self-appointed whip and leader of his present party, it might have been well for him to have mastered more of these horn-books of modern classics.

Let me give a chapter from the tariff planks of national Democratic platforms. First, that of 1856, at Cincinnati:

> Resolved, That there are questions connected with the foreign policy of this country which are inferior to no domestic question whatever. The time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in favor of free seas and progressive free trade throughout the world, by solemn manifestations to place their moral influence at the side of their successful example.

Precisely what this was intended to mean "no fellow can find out." It looks like a whale, and then again like a camel. But for the prating about "free seas," instead of free ships, indicating that the author was half-seas-over, it might be mistaken as the enunciation of a missionary foreign policy "throughout the world," supported by "solemn manifestations" and "moral influence." After all it may have been only a bit of borrowed rhetoric from some stray gubernatorial proclamation for a fast. Whether the inferior "domestic question" of the tariff was or was not intended to be wrapped up and postponed to "progressive free trade throughout the world," must be left to future exegetical commentators. The season of gestation allowed to this resolution was evidently too short. It had an untimely birth.

In 1860 the Democratic party was represented by the Douglas and Breckinridge national conventions, a double-headed curiosity, and the platforms of both were very pronounced in favor of the acquisition of Cuba, but were utterly, too utterly, dumb about the tariff. They sleep their long sleep and no sound can awake them!

In August, 1864, the Democratic national convention denounced the "failure to restore the Union by the experiment of war," but had not a word of denunciation in relation to the tariff of 1861, or as to any of its sudden augmentations. They let the tariff alone as severely as they did the acquisition of Cuba. Thus, for two Presidential terms, the party does not appear to have cared any more as to whether the tariff was protective or for revenue only, than whether or not McClellan, or Greeley, or General Hancock, each in their turn, respectively and successively spit upon their national platforms. The party had this great consolation: though their Presidential candidates were experimental failures, their platforms were a great success—in so far as they serve to point the moral and adorn the tale of Democratic defeats.

The next performance of these acrobats on platforms was in 1868, at New York, and I will give the cream of the sixth resolution:

> And a tariff for revenue, upon foreign imports, and such equal taxation under the internal-revenue laws as will afford incidental protection to domestic manufactures, and as will, without impairing the revenue, impose the least burden upon and best promote and encourage the great industrial interests of the country.

Here the Democratic party came out flat-footed for a tariff for revenue, sugar-coated with such incidental protection to domestic manufactures under the internal-revenue laws as would encourage the great industrial interests of the country! The resolution is fearfully and wonderfully made. Could anything be more astute or lucid? It would seem to have been intended to encourage the iron industries by putting an internal-revenue tax on whisky, and to promote the wool and woolen industries by an internal-revenue tax on lucifer matches and bank checks. If the services of the inspired writer of this resolution are ever called for again, I feel sure care will be taken that he is not overmuch inspired.

The culminating point of Democratic statesmanship appears to have been reached in 1872, at Baltimore. Sheer justice requires me to give the sixth plank in full:

> We demand a system of Federal taxation which shall not unnecessarily interfere with the industry of the people, and which shall provide the means necessary to pay the expenses of the Government economically administered, the pensions, the interest on the public debt, and a moderate reduction annually of the principal thereof; and recognizing that there are honest but irreconcilable differences of opinion with regard to the respective systems of protection and free trade, we remit the discussion of the subject to the people in their Congressional districts, and to the decision of the Congress thereon, wholly free from executive interference or dictation.

Here they recoguized "honest but irreconcilable differences of opinion" as to protection and free trade, and remitted the whole subject for discussion, on the "go-as-you-please" plan, to the Congressional districts, and nominated a Republican as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. Honest differences may still have to be tolerated, and the Democratic party may hereafter again find some advantage in the support of a Republican Presidential candidate, as no other will be so likely to succeed. In this way, whether they pay in money or mules, all can take their choice: spit on the platform and support the candidate, or spit upon the candidate and support the platform.

Mr. President, I hope you will remember that it was the senior Senator from Kentucky who was proud of resurrecting these platforms in spite of their rather rancid odor; and he it was who thrust them, unnecessarily as I think, into this discussion. Here is the platform constructed at Saint Louis in 1876, which the Senator indorsed and printed at full length, and which I shall undertake to show is a bundle of misstatements from beginning to end, wholly and emphatically untrue, and all the more shameful for appearing well-dressed in language not to be misunderstood:

> We denounce the present tariff levied upon nearly four thousand articles as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality, and false pretense. It yields a dwindling, not a yearly rising revenue; it has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few; it prohibits imports that might purchase the products of American labor; it has degraded American commerce from the first to an inferior rank on the high seas; it has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad, and depleted the returns of American agriculture, an industry followed by half our people; it costs the people five times more than it produces to the Treasury, obstructs the processes of production, and wastes the fruits of labor; it promotes fraud, fosters smuggling, enriches dishonest officials, and bankrupts honest merchants. We demand that all custom-house taxation shall be only for revenue.

Let me take the first paragraph of this Democratic platform: "We denounce the present tariff levied upon nearly 4,000 articles as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality, and false pretense." Now, what are the simple facts? I have had the articles upon which duties were levied under the tariff act of 1861 counted, and the whole number was only 795, and 193 were admitted free. The number of actually enumerated articles is now only 1,067, and 513 articles are admitted free. Was it not then, is it not now, a masterpiece of false pretense to denounce the tariff as being levied upon nearly 4,000 articles? Of course any general tariff law will be made to include a multitude of articles, as manufactures of wood, of cotton, or of iron or copper, but they are not specifically mentioned or separately levied upon, as charged by this blunderbuss and by the blunderheads who still repeat the big-sounding story, (not, of course, including the Senator from Kentucky.)

Take the next paragraph: "It [the tariff] yields a dwindling not a yearly rising revenue." This looks very like a willful misstatement. Everybody but the coiner of this electioneering tale knows that the revenue from the tariff, subject to annual fluctuations, as all tariffs must be, has been rising until it amounts to about four times what it was twenty years ago, never dwindling to or even approaching the point from where it first started.

The next antithetical and pregnant falsehoods about the tariff read thus: "It has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few." That is not true. No industry can be named that has been impoverished. They all rise up, prosperous everywhere, to deny the charge with a loud-ringing negative. And when the author of this part of the platform added "to subsidize a few" he failed to remember, if he applied subsidize to all articles upon which duties are levied, that he had already fixed the number not as a few, but "nearly four thousand!" No subsidy has in fact been given to anybody. A subsidy is given in money for a specific service. A tariff collects money of foreigners for the privilege of selling merchandise in our markets. Any of our people may compete with this foreign merchandise, but they have neither subsidy nor monopoly.

The next paragraph of this rather reckless Democratic platform is as follows: "It prohibits imports that might purchase the products of American labor." Once more, that is not true. We have no prohibitory duties, except those upon obscene articles, and none which forbid foreigners to send their goods and wares into our markets if they will pay the duties imposed upon them by law; and we do not, like barbarians, barter the products of American labor for foreign products, but sell for cash what we have to spare, and buy for cash what we need.

The next often reiterated and wholly unfounded slander upon the tariff comes out in this shape: "It has degraded American commerce from the first to an inferior rank on the high seas." I have once before shown that this malignant charge is untrue, and there is no Democratic glue that will make it adhere to the tariff. Our commerce on the high seas is vastly larger than ever before, and, if our tonnage of shipping is less, the tariff has no more to do with it than it has with the internal-revenue tax on cigarettes. When we temporarily lost our shipping on the high seas we saved forever the ship of state. We do not forget the facts, and our reproaches for our losses now rest, not so much upon our "wayward sister States," as upon that auxiliary power, the trafficker in free ships, which dealt the untimely blow.

In the next brazen charge upon the tariff, it was not enough to load the Democratic platform with one falsehood, but it comes triple-headed. It reads thus: "It has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad, and depleted the returns of American agriculture, an industry followed by half of our people." Neither at home nor abroad have the sales of American manufactures been cut down. Their growth has been unparalleled since 1860 in the history of the world. Many branches have increased their products an hundredfold, some even to five hundred or a thousandfold. Somewhere all the products have been sold, doubtless mainly at home, because Americans are able to consume the bulk of their products at home, as our free-trade rival is not; but neither is it true that our sales abroad have been cut down.

From official tables published, and from the Statistical Bureau, I am able to give for a series of years the value of exports from the United States of commodities of domestic manufacture, as follows:

1850	$15,617,750
1860	42,408,934
1870	76,916,659
1873	102,244,097
1876	110,208,840
1881	124,946,509

This shows a creditable advance since the old democratic days—

> When Adam delved and Eve spun—and that a great political party ought not to have made itself responsible for such a series of groundless statements. Until they obtained the respectable indorsement of the Senator from Kentucky I had supposed that all understood them to be platform fictions from which the Democratic party were to be immediately absolved after the election.

Nor is it true that the returns of American agriculture have been depleted. No argument will ever convince farmers that their returns ever have been or ever will be depleted by bringing a market for their productions nearer to their homes. Daily experience everywhere disproves the weak-kneed assertion to the contrary.

The next courageous assertion of the platform is that "it costs the people five times more than it produces to the Treasury." What is one of the arithmetical processes by which this libel upon all enlightened nations upholding tariffs is proved? Why, the duty upon cut nails is 1¼ cents per pound, and ergo all the millions of pounds of cut nails consumed are represented to cost the people 1¼ cents more than they would but for the tariff. The wholesale cost of nails is now about 3 cents per pound, sometimes less, and as cheap here as anywhere in the world. The wife's calico dress, it is claimed, is charged with 5½ cents per yard, and 10 per cent. ad valorem, and yet the calico is sold for 6¼ cents per yard, or less than the duty, but still the stout assertion stands that the people not only actually pay this nominal duty, but five times as much more! The old duty on kerosene oil, untouched for many years, is quoted at 40 cents per gallon, while it is sold at wholesale for 7½ cents per gallon, and cheaper than in any other quarter of the globe.

It is also attempted to sustain the grand assertion by assuming that we pay the duties on articles imported, and then that we have to pay just five times as much more upon home products. How we are to pay five times as much on the articles we do not produce is not explained. And the great fact is kept out of sight that an increase of the world's stock of any products, the consumption remaining the same, reduces the price the world over, and that the home price of foreign products with an added duty is often no more, if so much, as it would have been had there been no such increase of the whole product. This is the inflexible law in respect to all commodities: a large increase anywhere lowers the relative value. Sharp home competition never fails to reduce prices. The Canadians send a great many horses and sheep to our market, but they have to accept at home a price far below what our own people obtain, and but for our tariff horses, cattle, and sheep would bring in Montreal as much as they do in Atlantic markets. In these cases the Canadians pay the whole duty. I do not think it needful to go further to show how baseless this "master-piece of pretense" is, as I might by showing that the foreign price of many articles imported, when the duty is added, is here often much less, and this conclusively proves that we are not only not burdened with an alleged quintuple amount of duties but that the foreigner is compelled to bear a large portion of the burden imposed by the tariff.

Then we have the grand Democratic indictment of the tariff in these words: "It promotes fraud, fosters smuggling, enriches dishonest officials and bankrupts honest merchants." It is to be answered, no more than any tariff. The 10 per cent. duty on diamonds perhaps tempts the smuggler even more than the 50 per cent. on silks. This fusilade of malodorous adjectives is no more applicable to the "Morrill tariff" than to the North Pole; but the Senator from Kentucky would seem to support the charge by a reference to the moiety system which was established in 1799, survived in 1846, and was a general law specially belonging to no tariff act, but was repealed by the bill of a Republican Senator (Mr. Fenton) in 1875.

At last the Democratic tariff platform reaches its end with a prehensile attachment in this imperious style: "We demand that all custom-house taxation shall be only for revenue." Yes, they said that; but their candidate for the Presidency in 1880 did not agree to that, and in spite of all restraints would expound the tariff as only "a local question" and free trade as "folly." The party refused to second the demand, but broke and run from the platform, wherever they could make a better one, in many States.

My friend the Senator from Kentucky for the second time resolutely asserted that "every charge and specification in the resolution of 1876 against the present tariff was absolutely true, and all but one are as true now as then." I think I have demonstrated that it had not then, nor has it now, a single leg to stand upon, and that even the crutches supplied by an indorsement will not help it to keep its perpendicular, but I presume the Senator—

> Convinced against his will,
> Will be of the same opinion still.

When he testifies that a horse is seventeen feet high it will be useless for any court to suggest that he has made a mistake and meant seventeen hands high. He will stick to feet.

The Senator from Kentucky will not fail to see, and if he does, others will not, that there has been a new tariff revelation to Democratic saints as often as there used to be to the Latter Day Saints in the days of the prophet Joseph Smith. Rather than to follow the loud and portentous lead of the distinguished Senator in making the tariff a party question, the Democratic party might more adroitly follow the example of the Mormon prophet as to plural wives, and keep all articles of faith in relation to the tariff a profound secret from all but circumcised Democrats. I feel sure that several distinguished Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber, worthy of promotion as Presidential candidates, considering the lamentable infelicities, incongruities, and lack of principle of past tariff planks in Democratic platforms, and the past insufficient political revenue derived therefrom, will be ready in 1884 to exclaim, in the words of the Litany, "from all such perils, Good Lord deliver us!" Long before that time shall have arrived I have no doubt they will agree to a commission of experts—at least on platforms, but I very much fear they may not hail from Kentucky.

The national Democratic platform of 1880, at Cincinnati, only had a postscript tacked on to the end of the third resolution in these brief words, "and a tariff for revenue only," and there it swung to and fro, unacknowledged and disowned by the chief of the party. The Senator from Kentucky endured some perspiration in trying to show that this platform of a tariff for revenue only had the same meaning of that in 1876, which was a tariff only for revenue. There is some difference, but it is not worth worrying about, as it is, if I may be permitted to say so, of about the same importance as the difference between an old cocked-up hat and a cocked-up old hat; but, let me assure the Senator, neither will ever again be in fashion.

And here I take my leave of national Democratic tariff platforms. If they seem to quarrel and swear at each other, all that is hereafter to be changed, for the peace-composing Senator from Kentucky—

> Among the faithless, faithful only he—has told these "so-called Democrats," who are so willful as not to agree to his tariff opinions, that he shall propose to the people to "keep them at home." Of course he will, and their epitaph will read "Killed by the Kentucky platform." I will only add, peace be to their ashes!

It is well known that the manufacturing interests of Great Britain are somewhat depressed and suffering greatly as well as her agricultural interests. Great efforts are constantly put forth to produce contentment with their policy of free trade, and to inspire the hope of better days. A meeting was held in behalf of the woolen industries February 14, 1882, at London, where Lord Salisbury, the conspicuous leader of the majority of the House of Lords, offered a resolution and made a speech. It will be seen that he proposed to obtain protection for "goods of British make" under a higher law than that of Parliament. His resolution was as follows:

> That under present circumstances it is a matter of national interest that purchasers of textile fabrics should as far as possible give preference to goods of British make.

From the speech with which he followed I will add an extract, namely:

> A part of their object that day [he observed] was to address those, whoever they might be, in whose hands the decrees of fashion rested, and to entreat them to have regard in determining fashion to something more important than the taste or caprice of the moment—namely, to the great national needs which the hour had brought forth, and to the interests of those classes which by every consideration of patriotism they were bound to respect. [Cheers.]
> That it was in the power of each in her sphere, and in proportion to her purchases, to determine whether or not large bodies of English artisans and large bodies of English agriculturists should flourish or decay—whether industries that had given employment and comfort to great numbers should be permanent or should die away; whether the sources of prosperity should flow with new and abundant volume, or whether at least in some of their most important branches they should dry up. [Cheers.]
> That they should willingly sacrifice any feelings or caprices which had hitherto guided their choice, in order to bring or assure constant, sustaining employment to those classes who within the last few years had suffered so deeply, and on whose welfare and good feeling the prosperity and the greatness of all classes in the empire depended. [Cheers.]

This shows that they are earnestly striving in some form for protection to their own people, and to exclusively retain their home markets for their own people. By "every consideration of patriotism," Lord Salisbury entreats even women to see to it that their sources of prosperity shall not dry up.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I made a speech on the 10th day of January, replying to an elaborate argument of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] As soon as I closed he answered me as he thought satisfactorily, but I suppose he changed his mind after a little further reflection, and now, after two months and six days of incubation, he has produced a very beautifully written paper, full of wit and biblical quotations, illustrated very handsomely, and perhaps he is satisfied with it. If he is, so am I. I will endeavor on Monday morning when this bill is called up again to answer this speech, and also that made by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] who did me the honor to refer very freely to what I had said in my speech of the 10th of January.

I now rise only to apologize to the Senator from Vermont for attempting to interrupt him when he was alluding to what I had said about his argument being grotesque relative to curtailing the productions of the country. I wanted to ask him this question then, and I will ask it now, whether or not he thinks it is good statesmanship to curtail productions of wheat, if you please. Suppose a farmer can obtain $20 a bushel for a bushel of wheat because of its scarcity, is the country as well off as if he produced twenty bushels of wheat and sold them at a dollar a bushel, and obtained $20 for twenty bushels instead of $20 for one? That seemed to be the meaning of the Senator's argument, that by curtailing production the producer would get more; but what becomes of the consumer? What becomes of the operative, what becomes of the goods that have to go abroad to furnish the balance of trade, under the curtailing process, the starvation process, which the Senator from Vermont seems so anxious to bring about? There is where I contended the suggestion was grotesque, intensely grotesque; and it was the first time, I suppose, that ever advice was given to men to close their farms, to stop production, to curtail, to starve all the rest of the people, on the ground that they would get as much for a little as they get for a good deal, no matter who suffers, and that they should put money in their own pockets. That is the essence of the whole protective theory. That is what I called grotesque.

Mr. MORRILL. I presume the Senator does not mean to misstate any argument or suggestion I made.

Mr. BECK. No; perhaps the Senator was authorized to say that I was intensely stupid for saying that I did not understand it. That is the only way I understand it now.

Mr. MORRILL. The only suggestion I made there was that large crops of wheat inevitably exhausted the soil; and looking forward to the time when the country would be peopled by twice or thrice or quadruple the number we now have, I did not think it was good policy for us to exhaust our soil and send the crop abroad. I wanted to have it reserved for our own consumption.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, all internal taxes are to be abolished in order to keep up the tariff, I am told. Then all exports are to cease, and where is revenue to come from? The manufacturer sends out nothing, for I will show that he sends out less than 10 per cent., less than 6 per cent. of real manufactured stock out of all our great products that go abroad to-day.

But gentlemen have asked me to wait till Monday before going into the subject. I will then take up in illustration the Bessemer steel monopoly of Mr. Daniel J. Morrell and the men who are at the back of all these petitions, for each one of them refers to what Mr. Morrell and his friends said in their great association. That association not only pockets every dollar of the protection given, and sells the production for $28 a ton more than it is worth, but it is importing now pig-iron and ore from Spain and other countries, because the protection is so much greater on the steel rails it produces than the amount it pays for the ore that it is seeking to starve out all the American producers of that class of goods. The Bessemer steel monopoly, protected by patents and protected by tariffs, and charging $28 a ton on the 10,000 miles of railroad this country has had to build within the last year, has taken that much money out of the pockets of the people, while its laborers have not got more than 9 per cent. of the whole product.

Now, if you mean to protect the laborer, let the Bessemer steel monopolists have 6 per cent. on their capital and then divide all over that with their laborers, instead of starving them, as they are doing and as they did by closing up the Vulcan works at Saint Louis and other works elsewhere, and paying dead rents to keep down production so that prices might be increased. Let the laborer have some share in your protection and then there will be some decency in the pretense.

I was waited on the other day by some gentlemen from Detroit, Michigan, who told me that their laboring-men there were all in favor of a low tariff, free-traders, if you like that term. I asked "Why;" and the answer was, "Because men who live in Windsor, in Canada, just opposite Detroit, can for a dollar or a dollar and a quarter a month pay their ferriage backward and forward and live in good houses in Windsor at $6 a month that we have to pay $12 for in the city of Detroit; they bring their cans in their hands and eat their dinner in Detroit; they go over to Windsor and get blankets for $2 that we pay $4 for; they get their clothes there and everything they use for about half what we have to pay for them; they get all our products as cheaply as we do, because there can be no tax on exports, and provisions are as cheap in Windsor as in Detroit; and these men can come from Windsor and make the wages they receive for work in the workshops of Detroit go twice as far for all purposes for which men use wages as the men can who live in Detroit." But if a man living in Detroit goes to Windsor and attempts to buy a pair of pants or shoes he is arrested and held to be a felon. The doctrine of our tariff is protection to capital and free-trade in labor, with all the disadvantages against the American laborer.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask the Senator a question? Is he aware that the people of the Dominion of Canada, having power to legislate for themselves, have put a pretty sharp protective tariff on against goods of Great Britain?

Mr. BECK. They have put on not one-half what we have on the average.

Mr. HAWLEY. They have adopted the principle very heartily.

Mr. BECK. They have adopted a principle of protection and retaliation that the protectionists of this country are seeking to drive England and all other liberal traders into in order to protect themselves; and yet the fact remains to-day that a laborer can live in Windsor and work in Detroit and make his wages produce nearly double what the Detroit man's wages can produce there, and therefore the laborer is in Windsor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my friend, as I have been at Windsor and Detroit, if Windsor has so great an advantage over Detroit in manufactures and in economy of living, &c., as he states, why is it that Windsor is a small, insignificant town, of no importance, while Detroit is a rapidly-growing city?

Mr. BECK. There are thousands of reasons why Detroit should be much greater than Windsor. Why is the United States bigger than Canada? Why is this great country, with its empire of free lands that it gives to everybody on the face of the earth who will come and declare his intention to become a citizen, for nothing, greater than Sweden?

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer to my question would be because we protect our industry. But that is not the point.

Mr. BECK. You destroy your industry.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me put again the question: If a man has so great an advantage in Windsor over the citizen of Detroit, as the citizens of Detroit are in a larger measure composed of foreigners, nearly one-third of the people, why do they not all cross the river?

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senator if the fact be not true—let us come back to the fact—that a man can in Windsor live in a cheaper house than he can in Detroit?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know anything about the prices there. I only wonder, if the Senator's allegation be correct, why the people of Detroit do not go over and live in Windsor.

Mr. BECK. The Senator heard the statement I made; the same question was asked by the Senator from Vermont a moment ago, why do not all men leave this country? Why, sir, the tariff cannot destroy this country. The laboring-man that lives in Windsor can work upon exactly the same terms that the laboring-man that lives in Detroit can. Is not that true?

Mr. GARLAND. Will the Senator yield to a motion to adjourn, and go on on Monday?

Mr. BECK. I will.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. BECK. I will answer you all on Monday.

Mr. FRYE. Let me ask a question now. Why is it that within the last few years 3,000 French Canadians have moved from Canada into my city of 20,000 inhabitants, and that they remained there five or six years, accumulated property, and then returned to Canada after the property was accumulated?

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BECK. I do, retaining the floor on this question for Monday.

HENRY STRAWBRIDGE.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to yield to me that I may get unanimous consent to call up Senate bill No. 240. It is a bill which comes from the Pension Committee, and I think will not take a moment of time.

Mr. GARLAND. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks that the pending bill be informally laid aside, in order that the Senate may proceed at this time to the consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 240) granting an increase of pension to Henry Strawbridge. It proposes to allow Henry Strawbridge, late a private in Company G, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of the pension now paid him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOGS CUT ON MENOMONEE RESERVATION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent to take up a House bill now on the table which was laid there this morning.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2736) authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation, in Wisconsin.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that Senate bill on the same subject, being the bill (S. No. 866) authorizing the sale of certain logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation, in Wisconsin, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

CORNELIA F. WHITE.

Mr. FARLEY. I ask unanimous leave of the Senate to take from the Calendar the bill (S. No. 802) granting a pension to Mrs. Cornelia F. White, reported unanimously by the Committee on Pensions. It will not take a minute to pass it. It is important to pass the bill, and I ask consent now.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt every pension bill reported by the committee ought to pass. I have no doubt that any day, on motion, all the pension bills can be taken up and passed; but we ought not to pass bills at this hour of the day in this way.

Mr. FARLEY. This will not take five minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not object to a pension bill, but I think it is not wise to pass any more bills now, because we do not know what is going on.

Mr. FARLEY. It will not take five minutes to pass the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FARLEY. Can a motion to adjourn be made when I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS.), Senators will resume their seats.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for order before any business is done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will entertain no motion until the Senate is in order.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the declaration of the Senator from California that he had not yielded the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand that a Senator can take the floor and force a bill through and prevent the intervening of a motion to adjourn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course not. The Senator from California was on the floor and has a right to be heard, and when he is heard the Senate will determine for itself what shall be the order of business.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. My point of order is this, that the Senator from California had made a request for unanimous consent. He exhausted his right to the floor when he did that and he cannot hold the floor after that. Then the motion to adjourn came in.

Mr. FARLEY. The Senator from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken. There was no opposition to my request except that the Senator from Ohio rose and moved to adjourn. He did not object to my request at all. I admit that any Senator can object now, and then the question will be put. I say if this bill takes five minutes I will withdraw my request.

Mr. SHERMAN. State the motion.

Mr. FARLEY. My motion is to take from the Calendar——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California stated to the Chair from his place that he had not yielded the floor to the Senator from Ohio. The Senator had been recognized by the Chair. The Chair takes the statement of the Senator from California that he had not yielded, and therefore the Chair overrules the question of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FARLEY. Now, Mr. President, I will make the motion, with a full knowledge of what may be the result, to take from the Calendar the bill (S. No. 802) granting a pension to Mrs. Cornelia F. White.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves to postpone the pending and prior orders, with notice that he proposes if that be done to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill stated by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pending that motion I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Several Senators desire a brief executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

SAINT CLAIR A. MULHOLLAND.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move now to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 699.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 699) granting an increase of pension to Saint Clair A. Mulholland. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Colonel Saint Clair A. Mulholland, late of the One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month, instead of $15 per month, which he has heretofore been receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. PLATT. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Pendleton,
Anthony,	Frye,	Logan,	Ransom,

So the bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1882.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday will be read.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of so much of the Journal as relates merely to the introduction of bills be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The Journal was then read and approved.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN IOWA.

Mr. McCOID. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 4166, to divide the State of Iowa into two judicial districts, be made a special order after the morning hour for Thursday, March 23, to continue from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. ATKINS. As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HISCOCK] is not now in his seat, I, as a member of that committee, must object to this request unless the order be made subject to the priority of appropriation bills.

Mr. MILLS. I object to any more special orders.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAZELTON. I understand that there is to be a session of the House to-night for the consideration of pension bills. The Calendar is very small, and there are three or four members here who desire to use a portion of this evening for general debate. I ask unanimous consent that they may have that privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that yesterday the order relating to business at the Friday evening sessions was modified, by unanimous consent, so as to include reports from the Committee on Pensions as well as those from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HAZELTON. Well, I make the request that if there be time members be allowed to make speeches this evening in the way of general debate—not to interfere, however, with pension business. There may be plenty of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that general debate be allowed this evening, not to interfere with the consideration of any bills on the Private Calendar which are entitled to be considered under the continuing order. Is there objection?

Mr. JOYCE. I object.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate bill. If the House will give me a moment for a statement of the case, I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 17) to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. VALENTINE. I would like to have a moment to state the object of this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve points of order.

Mr. BRAGG. And I reserve the right to object.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, it is intended by this bill to straighten the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska. A portion of the present northern boundary is down the Keyapaha and the Niobrara Rivers. The Niobrara is a shallow sandy stream, from half a mile to a mile and a quarter in width, full of timber islands. Under the present law the northern boundary of our State down that stream is the main channel of the stream. That channel shifts with the wind. When the wind is blowing from the north or the northwest the channel is upon the southern bank of the stream. If the wind shifts to the south or southwest the channel moves from half a mile to a mile and a quarter northward around these islands. It is very necessary to have a fixed, well-defined boundary line. I will add that there is no objection to this bill on the part of the people of Dakota who are as much interested in having this line straightened as are the people of Nebraska.

Mr. DUNNELL. Has this bill been examined by the House committee?

Mr. VALENTINE. Yes, sir; they have had it under consideration, and allowed me to take it from the hands of the committee to bring it up at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska shall be, and hereby is, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, extended so as to include all that portion of the Territory of Dakota lying south of the forty-third parallel of north latitude and east of the Keyapaha River and west of the main channel of the Missouri River; and when the Indian title to the lands thus described shall be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said lands shall be, and hereby is, ceded to the State of Nebraska, and subject to all the conditions and limitations provided in the act of Congress admitting Nebraska into the Union; and the northern boundary of the State shall be extended to said forty-third parallel as fully and effectually as if said lands had been included in the boundaries of said State at the time of its admission to the Union, reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands and of disposing of the same: Provided, That this act, so far as jurisdiction is concerned, shall not take effect until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands has been extinguished, nor shall it take effect until the State of Nebraska shall have assented to the provisions of this act; and if the State of Nebraska shall not, by an act of its Legislature, consent to the provisions of this act within two years next after the passage hereof, this act shall cease and be of no effect.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much territory is to be added to the State by this change?

Mr. VALENTINE. About a township and a half.

There being no objection, the Committee on the Territories was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAVINGS-BANK, SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1992) for the relief of the savings-bank of Santa Rosa, California, in order that it may be put on its passage at this time.

Mr. ATKINS. I reserve the right to object until after the bill has been read.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; let that be done.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill for the relief of the savings-bank of Santa Rosa, California.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the savings-bank of Santa Rosa the sum of $1,062.20, upon a duplicate check to be drawn in lieu of check numbered 33252, drawn and dated the 29th of June, 1880, on the United States assistant treasurer at San Francisco, California, and numbered 33252, payable to the order of one James M. Samuels, and indorsed by said James M. Samuels to the said savings-bank of Santa Rosa, said check being signed by W. H. Payne, United States pension agent at San Francisco, California; which said check it is claimed was lost on being sent by said savings-bank of Santa Rosa to the Anglo-California Bank, limited, at San Francisco, and was never received by the said Anglo-California Bank, limited: Provided, That before the payment hereinbefore authorized the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that said check has not been paid: And provided further, That said duplicate check may be paid upon and after compliance with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, under section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in cases where the amount of the draft is not over $1,000, though the amount of said duplicate check exceeds that sum, but not otherwise.

SEC. 2. That if said W. H. Payne, who issued said check, shall be dead or no longer in the service of the United States when said duplicate is applied for, the proper accounting officer, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall have prescribed, shall state an account in favor of the owner of said check for the amount thereof, and charge such amount to the account of such officer or agent, as is provided by section 3647 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in cases where the amount for which the last check was drawn was not over $1,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand from the gentleman from California that under the provisions of this bill a bond will be required to be executed to indemnify the United States in case this draft should ever turn up.

Mr. BERRY. Certainly, such is the case; and I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. In that case I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I desire to know is that there is a provision in the bill for indemnifying the United States in case the draft should again turn up.

Mr. BERRY. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The bill under consideration (H. R. No. 1992) is for the relief of the savings-bank of Santa Rosa, California. The bank held check No. 33252, dated June 27, 1880, drawn by W. H. Payne, United States pension agent, on the Treasury of the United States, in favor of James M. Samuels, for the sum of $1,062.20. As appears by the letter of N. W. Spaulding, assistant treasurer of the United States, it has never been paid. We submit Mr. Spaulding's letter as part of this report. Were the amount of this draft not over $1,000, the bank could obtain the relief wished by complying with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

Your committee think that the relief should be granted upon compliance with such regulations, and recommend the passage of the bill as amended and herewith submitted.

Amend by inserting after "cents," in the sixth line, the following words: "Upon a duplicate check to be drawn;" and after "drawn," in the seventh line, insert "and dated 29th June, 1880;" and after "California," in the eighth line, insert "and numbered 33252."

And further amend by striking out all after the word "further" in the nineteenth line and inserting in lieu thereof the following words: "Said duplicate check may be paid upon and after compliance with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury under section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in cases where the amount of the draft is not over $1,000, though the amount of said duplicate check exceeds that sum, but not otherwise"

SEC. 2. That if said W. H. Payne, who issued said check, shall be dead or no longer in the service of the United States when said duplicate is applied for, the proper accounting officer, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall have prescribed, shall state an account in favor of the owner of said check for the amount thereof, and charge such amount to the account of such officer or agent as is provided by section 3647 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in cases when the amount for which the lost check was drawn was not over $1,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I asked for the reading of the report, Mr. Speaker, because I did not understand why there should not be a duplicate draft, as in the case of individuals. I understand, however, by the report that there is a limit fixed, and therefore withdraw all further objection.

The bill, with the amendment of the committee, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BERRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. JOYCE. I desire to withdraw my objection to the proposition submitted some time ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves by unanimous consent that general debate be allowed during the evening session, not to interfere with the business of the Private Calendar included within the special order. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. What are we to understand by not interfering with the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the business is to be taken up under the special order including pension as well as invalid pension cases, and if they do not consume the evening session then general debate may be in order.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PAGE. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent of this House that it will for this day lay aside the private business and allow discussion to proceed on the bill to carry into effect the treaty between the United States Government and China, and that it may continue to-day and to-morrow, when at three o'clock the previous question shall be called. I do this, Mr. Speaker, because on to-morrow it is the understanding we shall close the bill by taking the final vote on it. Now, there are a great many gentlemen who desire to be heard or to make some remarks on this measure. I hope the House will give me unanimous consent that the private business of to-day may be laid aside and we shal lproceed to the consideration of a subject dear to the people of three States of this Union.

Mr. ORTH. When do you propose to call the previous question?

Mr. PAGE. To-morrow at three o'clock.

Mr. BROWNE, Mr. RICE of Massachusetts, and other members objected.

Mr. HOUK. If there were a condition coupled with the unanimous consent I presume the House would not object, and that is that the Private Calendar should have its day immediately after this bill has been disposed of.

[Cries of "No."]

Mr. PAGE. Then I feel constrained by several voices around me on both sides of this House to do what I very much dislike to do, that is, antagonize private business. I now rise for the purpose of moving to lay aside the private business, and I hope a two-thirds vote will agree to do that, so we may proceed to the consideration of the Chinese immigration bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. You cannot carry it.

Mr. CAMP. What becomes of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the motion of the gentleman from California not to dispense with the morning hour, but only to dispense with the private business for to-day.

Mr. CAMP. I make the point it is not in order until we have had the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would hold this motion, if it prevailed, would not necessarily dispose of the morning hour.

Mr. PAGE. I move then that it include the morning hour, so that the Chinese immigration bill may be taken up at once.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 64.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion was not agreed to.

CLAIM OF CHARLES EWING.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present at this time a privileged report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am instructed by the committee to report back the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to furnish this House copies of all additional affidavits and papers connected with the claim of one Charles Ewing against the Osage Indian Nation, not embraced in his answer to House Resolution No. 73, as heretofore adopted, embodied in House Executive Document No. —; and report such other information as he may possess in reference thereto.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPRISONMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to offer sundry resolutions adopted by the United Labor League of America upon the subject of the rights of American citizens abroad, and ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE UNITED LABOR LEAGUE OF AMERICA RELATIVE TO THE RIGHTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

At a meeting of the United Labor League of America, held in the city of Chicago on the evening of the 21st of February, 1882, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The meeting being called to order, Major John M. Collins, (formerly commander of the Fifty-eighth Regiment fighting Pennsylvania Volunteers,) supervisor of the labor leagues for Illinois, occupied the chair.

Jacob D. Felthousen acted as secretary.

John Pope Hodnett, president and founder of the United Labor League of America, offered the following resolutions for the immediate consideration of the meeting:

Whereas it has come to our knowledge that citizens of the American Republic have been illegally and unconstitutionally deprived of their liberty, and without trial thrown into English and British bastiles, and held there in defiance of international law and existing treaty with the Government of Great Britain and Ireland, made expressly for the protection of such citizens, and to prevent the occurrence of the evils from which our forefathers suffered during the war of 1812, and to emancipate once and forever from English thraldom men who were bold and honest enough to renounce all allegiance to the English crown, and declare themselves free and independent citizens of the United States of American; and

Whereas by such illegal and unconstitutional acts the English Government has grossly insulted the law-making and the treaty-making power in the United States of America by abrogating, without sufficient cause, a treaty made with it by the United States, and sanctioned by all the solemnity of legislation; depriving citizens of the United States of their liberty while traveling in Great Britain for expressing their opinions on questions of great vitality to the happiness and freedom of the human race, and by such arrests nullifying an existing treaty with the United States, without any notice being given to the United States, or without the consent of the United States being given thereto; and

Whereas such treaty does exist to-day, and has not been rescinded by either power—by the United States or by England—and Englishmen under its provisions are availing themselves of the blessings of American institutions, and are holding public meetings and lecturing on American rostrums throughout the length and breadth of the land, and are making vast fortunes from the proceeds of such lectures, and taking money and wealth from Americans, whom their government despises; and whenever one of these same Americans lands in Ireland and expresses sympathy for the down-trodden farming serfdom of that beautiful but unfortunate island he is thrown into a loathsome dungeon and left to rot there amid the dens of vice and corruption which continually breathe the most deadly odors:

Resolved by the United States Labor League of America in the city of Chicago assembled, That we demand that all existing treaties with Great Britain and Ireland relative to naturalization laws be strictly construed and rigidly enforced, and that all English subjects now claiming the protection of the English Government and traveling in the United States receive the same treatment at the hands of the Government of the United States that citizens of the United States now traveling in Great Britain and Ireland receive at the hands of the English Government.

Resolved, That we demand from our Government for our citizens the same protection when traveling abroad which the English Government has always accorded to its subjects, and that the full force and power of our Government, both civil and military, be invoked to secure to Americans traveling in Great Britain and Ireland the same rights (legal rights) which Americans accord to Englishmen, subjects of the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, who travel and lecture through the United States of America.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the down-trodden people of Ireland in their struggle for legislative independence, and we shall hail with universal acclamation the day when caste and primogeniture shall be wiped out of the statute-books of England, Ireland, and Scotland, and the three islands unite in one bond of peace as three sovereign states of an independent, intelligent, intellectual, and colossal republic; when Englishmen shall own the land of England, Irishmen the land of Ireland, and Scotchmen the land of Scotland, and all the peoples of Europe the land of Europe, and liberty sit empress of the united states of Europe as she does to-day in the United States of America.

Resolved, That we behold in Charles Stewart Parnell the true principles which distinguished his forefathers in our own war for independence, and he has shown those sterling qualities of patriotism and self-reliance which entitle him to the admiration and respect of mankind, and we feel doubly proud of him on account of his American lineage, for he could by his talents and position in society be at the very head of Ireland's oppressors. Refusing place and power from the fell agencies of that government which drove his forefathers to America, his incorruptible patriotism deserves universal admiration. He stands to-day in the shoes and assumes the attitude of the great Irish tribune, Daniel O'Connell, and it is a crime against nature and nature's God to keep such a nobleman bound in chains and hidden in a jail.

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be tendered to Hon. WILLIAM E. ROBINSON, of New York, a member of the labor league of Kings County, for his able speech in the House of Representatives, at Washington, District of Columbia, in defense of inviolable rights of American citizens abroad, and for his just castigation of recreant and flunky Americans on the floor of Congress, who toady to English despotism and turn their backs on their fathers' graves, lick the hand of power that smote them, and betray the trust confided to their keeping by the workingmen who elected them to Congress to defend and sustain labor instead of to side with European despots to crush it; and for the many other eminent services rendered by Mr. ROBINSON to the cause of the workingmen of America and Europe we hereby tender him our undivided support in his efforts against the encroachments of power, at Washington, District of Columbia, and we hereby request the Illinois delegation in Congress to unite with him in securing the immediate release of American citizens now languishing in English jails.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with an adverse recommendation the petition of R. W. Clarke; which was laid on the table and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports in the morning hour is now concluded.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOOKER. I beg leave to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] that the House has set apart every Friday evening for the consideration of pension bills. I think when we go into Committee of the Whole House at this time we should lay aside pension bills and leave them for consideration to-night.

Mr. TAYLOR. That would meet my approbation, but I think it is unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair it is not very likely that pension bills will be reached to-day.

THE MISSISSIPPI OVERFLOW.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is on the Speaker's table a joint resolution of the Senate, No. 49, making a further appropriation to relieve the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. That resolution was returned to the Senate with two amendments by the House. One of those amendments has been agreed to by the Senate, and the other has not been agreed to, and the joint resolution has been returned to the House. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. RICH in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar.

MAJOR WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 670) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Willam M. Maynadier, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,726.50, the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona Territory, caused by robbery committed by his clerk, D. D. Chandler, at Prescott, April 3, 1876, as shown by the finding and report of a board of inquiry appointed by General Kautz, commanding that military department, to investigate the circumstances of the loss; and also the further sum of $100 paid by said Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler; the restoration of both sums having been recommended by said board of inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the report has already been read twice. Does the gentleman desire it to be read again?

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon examining a copy of the printed report which I have before me, I find that there are some matters in it which have never been read to the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is objection the report will be again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume that the reading of the report at this time is proper any way, as this case now comes up anew.

Mr. TAYLOR. The report has already been read once or twice. It is a very long one. Is there any need to read it again?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to having the report read?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not wish to object to the reading of the report, but I desire to say that the report is a long one. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is prepared to make a speech on the subject, and I think his argument will bring out every material point in the report. I simply suggest that the reading of the report will occupy unnecessary time, and I do not desire to have this case occupy more time than is absolutely necessary. I therefore suggest, with that view alone, that the reading of the report be omitted.

Mr. SPARKS. I desire to have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the report will be again read.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I object. The report was read when the bill was up before.

Mr. CAMP. I desire to ask why the reading of this report is not now in order. If this bill was laid aside on some previous occasion, it was laid aside for future consideration, and we now commence de novo to consider the bill. The bill has been read this morning. I for one was not here two weeks ago when the report was read, and I would like to hear it read.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think there should be any objection to the reading of the report.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The objection is that it was read two weeks ago.

Mr. HOLMAN. For some cause or other the report was never completely read, because when it was first presented to the Committee of the Whole it contained only a portion of the matter it now contains.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the fact. From some cause in printing the report originally a portion was omitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. So that the report has never been read.

Mr. WHEELER. It is true that all of this report has never been read, and I therefore do not object to its being read at this time. I simply made the suggestion to the House that every point in this report which has not been read that is material to the case would necessarily be brought out in the discussion.

In the last ten pages of matter in the report which has been printed there is a great deal that is not material to this case. I simply wish to save the time of the Committee of the Whole that will be occupied in reading that which is not material to the case, as I am confident that gentlemen opposed to the bill will bring out every material point in the discussion of the bill.

Mr. SPARKS. What objection has my colleague on the committee to reading the report?

Mr. WHEELER. None whatever, except what I have stated.

Mr. SPARKS. Does not the gentleman want members to understand the case?

Mr. WHEELER. I make no objection to the report being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the report has already been twice read.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a mistake. All of this report has not been read, because it is now for the first time before the Committee of the Whole. A portion only of it has been read and considered.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is correct. From some cause a portion of this report was not included in the original printing of the report, and it has since been printed. Therefore there is a part of the report as now before the Committee of the Whole which has never been read.

Mr. DUNNELL. The reading of the report was begun and proceeded with, and by unanimous consent the balance of the report was omitted. I understand, therefore, that the report has once been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds, upon information from the Clerk, that the report has been twice read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] say that all the papers contained in the report have been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the report having been discontinued by unanimous consent, the Chair is of opinion it is not now in order to read it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. The fact is that all the papers in the report were not before the Committee of the Whole when this bill was up before for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the report has been read.

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand that the substantial part of the report has been read. The balance of it consists simply of extracts from documents which were recognized in the portion of the report which was read, and by unanimous consent the reading of those documents was dispensed with. In my judgment the Chair is right in holding that the report cannot now be read, except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The RECORD shows that the report was read on the 25th of February. If there is no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, nothing can better illustrate the utter inability of a legislative body to act judicially upon a claim against the Government than the matter now before this committee. Here is a paper, a portion of which was printed and read to the Committee of the Whole upon a former occasion. Since that time, through agencies that I am not aware of, additional matter has been incorporated into this report; and when the effort is made to have the Committee of the Whole informed as to the character of this additional matter the point is made that the report has been read. Gentlemen who ought to be familiar with what is transpiring here insist that the whole report has been read, when in fact the very documents upon which it is founded have never been brought to the attention of the committee at all; and scarcely a member is informed of the state of facts upon which the claim rests; and this claim of $3,826.50 will be allowed and paid out of the public Treasury or rejected without any intelligent consideration. The amount involved is small, but these small items in the aggregate form the millions which deplete the Treasury.

On a former occasion I called attention to the fact that this paymaster had, when the embezzlement occurred, a complete remedy in the Court of Claims if he was in fact entitled to any relief, but he declined going into that court, where complete justice could have been done, and appeals to the good nature of Congress.

But, sir, this new illustration of the impolicy of the attempt by Congress to settle private claims against the Government could scarcely strengthen the universal conviction in Congress and out of Congress that as a legislative body we should have nothing to do with the adjustment of claims against the Government, that any tribunal we can organize would furnish a better guarantee for justice both to the claimant and to the Government than Congress or its committees.

But what new facts are presented by the papers now filed? I ask that the Clerk may read to the committee the statement of D. D. Chandler, on page 6 of this amended report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the portion designated as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRESCOTT, ARIZONA, April 24, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request relative to the amount of funds found short by you in your office safe, as per your account-current for April, 1876, I will here frankly confess that the combination lock on said safe I considered insecure and worthless, and that I was, without knowing any single number of the combination of the lock, able at almost any time to open said safe, and that at different times I did open said safe and abstract therefrom money for my own use for which you were responsible.

The amount abstracted at various times I am unable to state, but am satisfied that all shortages on your accounts were through my means.

I am, sir, truly yours,

D. D. CHANDLER.

Major W. M. MAYNADIER, Paymaster, U. S. A.

Mr. HOLMAN. This statement of the embezzling clerk is presented by the Committee on Claims as evidence for the claimant. I wish to call the attention of the committee in general, and especially the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] who reported this bill, to this very extraordinary paper. It is assumed by the committee making this report that this officer lost this fund without any negligence on his part; that he was reasonably cautious and careful in the management of this public fund. Yet this document upon which the bill is in some degree predicated shows, if it proves anything, the extraordinary fact that this money was not taken from the safe at one time, was not a single act of theft or of embezzlement on the part of the clerk, but that this sum of $3,826.50 was taken from time to time at the leisure of the embezzler.

There is no statement in this report that this paymaster was sick, that any public duties called him away from his office for a period of weeks. No reason is given why he should not himself have looked after these public funds left in his charge. Yet the fact, as I think, is apparent that this money was embezzled and used by this clerk from time to time as he thought proper, and seemingly without any interference by the paymaster, who now asks relief after these ten years or more have elapsed.

Can any gentleman say that an officer intrusted with public funds was faithfully discharging his trust when it is shown that from time to time this embezzlement was going on until nearly $4,000 had been taken? And when this clerk is captured, nine days after the embezzlement is discovered, the sum of only $290, I believe, was found in his possession, the capture taking place, as I understand from the report, a short time, nine days perhaps, after the final discovery was made. Will the gentleman from Alabama tell the committee how it happened that this officer, if reasonably vigilant, failed to know that these funds were being embezzled from time to time, when the fact was right under his eye that the fund was disappearing.

In my judgment, from my stand-point, looking at the matter as one of high public policy, it is exceedingly questionable whether a public officer should be relieved at all in cases where public funds committed to his charge are lost, unless lost by some cause which prudence could not guard against, or taken by superior force, because the importance and necessity of preserving integrity in government and honesty in its administration demands that the highest possible safeguards be placed around revenues drawn from the people by taxation. Public funds, coined from the sweat of labor and held in trust for the people, should be regarded as sacred, and a vigorous public sentiment should render the crime of embezzlement almost impossible.

We have read in our boyhood that in the earlier days of the Roman Republic the treasures devoted to the public use were regarded as sacred, like the gifts offered to the gods. It was sacrilege to divert them to a private use, and those rugged old republicans threw the embezzler from the top of the Tarpeian Rock as one guilty of sacrilege. Those ancient republicans seem to have taken a higher view of public trusts and public duty than that which is common to our higher civilization. We have in these recent years relieved public officers of every grade from losses resulting from embezzlement with such liberal prodigality that a crime once in our history of infrequent occurrence is now so common as scarcely to arrest attention, and your Calendar groans with bills granting relief from the results of this the most despicable of felonies.

But in the case pending, even if it be conceded that where proper safeguards have been thrown around the custody of the public moneys by a public officer, and an embezzlement has taken place, he should be relieved—even if this is to be considered as the fixed policy of Congress, yet this case does not come within that rule; for here it is shown by this paper, containing the statement of the party charged with the offense—a paper presented here as evidence why this paymaster should be released from liability—that the moneys were taken under such circumstances as that an officer of reasonable vigilance would have known the fact that embezzlement of the funds committed to his charge was going on before the whole or even a large part of the fund had been abstracted. For fear of misapprehension, let me read to my friend from Alabama this statement of Chandler, the clerk charged with committing the embezzlement:

I will here frankly confess that the combination lock on said safe I considered insecure and worthless, and that I was, without knowing any single number of the combination of the lock, able at almost any time to open said safe, and that at different times I did open said safe and abstract therefrom money for my own use for which you were responsible.

And it is proposed to relieve this paymaster from liability for moneys thus taken from time to time while under his eye, from a safe shown to have been absolutely insecure; and thus the example is to be set that absolute carelessness on the part of the officer does not render him liable for funds embezzled while under his control. I trust that at least this precedent will not be established.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, if I have rightly comprehended the discussion, two points are insisted upon by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

First, I understand that he believes that it is the duty of Congress to refuse relief to any officer for the responsibility incurred by the loss of money which is stolen while in his possession, unless taken by superior force or lost by causes which prudence could not guard against.

The second position taken is that the statement of the defaulting clerk Chandler shows that Maynadier did not take that care which a prudent man would take in the management of his own affairs, nor did he exercise that care and diligence which officers in his position of public trust should take in caring for and preserving funds of the Government.

In the general routine of business the bill now under consideration was referred to the committee of which I have the honor to be a member. The report was prepared by the committee after a painstaking and careful study of the facts and, as we thought, judicial consideration of the law which governs in such cases. If they were wrong in any of their conclusions, they would esteem it as a favor to them, as well as a duty to the House and to our country, for these errors to be pointed out, so that the action of the House will be such that it may be a proper precedent for action in similar cases which are to come before it.

In investigations of this character we must never forget that we are the representatives of the people, and as such the guardians of the Treasury, but at the same time we are called upon to act fairly with the petitioner, who asks and only has a right to ask for cold, naked justice. He has no right to appeal to our sympathy, and we have no right to allow our sympathies to in the slightest degree influence our decisions. The first question to be considered is, what rule should govern this House as to the degree of care a disbursing officer must show he has exercised before we can decide and decree that the loss shall not fall upon him, but that by our votes it should be sustained by the public Treasury, which belongs to our constituents? Shall we say that measure of care we exact shall be that of a common carrier? All will, I think, agree that such a ruling would be too severe, yet the language used by my esteemed friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] fixes a paymaster's liability almost as stringent as that exacted of a common carrier or bailee for hire, and every lawyer will admit that at common law to establish that relation the right of compensation must exist, and even the stringent care which the common law exacts from the common carrier and bailee for hire excuses them from liability for losses caused by natural accidents which human prudence could not foresee or prevent.

A paymaster is an officer of the Army. He is ordered and required to keep large sums of money on hand at all times. He requires and by law is directed to employ a clerk, to whom this money must at least in a measure be intrusted. A paymaster's rank is that of major, and his pay is the same as a major of the infantry, the cavalry, or the artillery. It is the same as a major of the Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, and the same as the pay of surgeon with the rank of major. It therefore appears that he receives pay for services which demand and require his entire time and talents. He receives no compensation for the risk incurred in the constant control and care of his disbursement of money. He receives the same pay whether his disbursements are fifty thousand or fifty million. He does not, like the trustee, receive a salary and in addition thereto commissions on money received and disbursed.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Can the gentleman from Alabama state how much money was in the custody of Major Maynadier at any one time, and also during how long a period this defalcation of the clerk occurred?

Mr. WHEELER. I will read from the report, as it is very concise. On page 8 Major Maynadier's affidavit says:

I remained at my station throughout the month of February, and on the last day of the month my balance on hand was found correct, the original packages (already counted by me) being taken at their marked value, which is the usual method of balancing cash in banks, business houses, and by all disbursing officers.

The board in their report say:

Nor is it impossible that a greater amount had been stolen before the end of the month. It appears from the statement of Major Maynadier that in verifying the amount of cash in his safe he did not always count, and perhaps did not on this occasion count, the money in each and every package. He generally counted only the loose money and broken packages in his till, and estimated the original packages by the figures marked on their wrappers. These packages had been carefully counted when deposited in the safe, and had not been disturbed thereafter by him. Chandler, being aware of this, and having secret access to the safe, could and possibly did, in the latter part of March, abstract some small sums from these original packages. If he did so, and if Major Maynadier had actually counted all the money in his safe, the original packages as well as the loose money, finding his money deficient, he would have been thrown upon his guard, and might sooner have detected Chandler, and perhaps have prevented a part of the robbery. But the board attaches no blame to Major Maynadier for this, since he seems to have done all that common prudence and the custom among business men required. Chandler had been highly recommended by two experienced paymasters in whose employ he had been, and during the year that he served with Major Maynadier he was considered honest and capable.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Is the amount abstracted stated anywhere?

Mr. WHEELER. I am coming to that part of your inquiry. The amount he had on hand March 31, appears to have been $4,081.11.

Mr. SPARKS. How much did he lose?

Mr. WHEELER. I find it stated at $4,017.

Mr. SPARKS. How much money did he have altogether on hand?

Mr. WHEELER. The report shows the amount. It shows that on March 31 he had on hand $4,081.11. That is the last time the money was counted. Now, the next day, or possibly the day following, the robbery occurred.

Mr. SPARKS. So that he lost nearly all of the money that was on hand at that time.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir. The clerk stole everything when he left except the small change which appears to have been on hand at that time.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I understand you to say that everything he had on hand at the time the money was last counted was taken?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir; nearly everything.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. And before it was counted again?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir; between the time it was counted and the 2d of April this money was taken. Now, the money was counted on the 31st day of March, and it appears that the safe was not again opened by Major Maynadier until the morning of the 3d of April; and between March 31st and the morning of April 3d this money was stolen.

Mr. BRAGG. May I ask the gentleman a question in this connection?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir; most certainly; any question.

Mr. BRAGG. Was not his account one hundred and forty-seven dollars and some cents short when he made his count on the 31st day of March; showing that prior to that time that amount of money had been abstracted by the clerk; and did not he disregard that fact and allow this clerk to remain; and does not the report of the board of survey, on page 4, show that to be a fact?

Mr. WHEELER. I will explain that, I think, to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Wisconsin. I ask the Clerk to read that portion of the report which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Again, though most of the robbery probably took place between the night of the 1st of April and the morning of the 2d, it is believed, and Chandler's confession acknowledges, that some of the money had been taken before that time. In evidence of this, the board find that Major Maynadier received on the 7th of March $147.35 as effects of a deceased soldier, but Chandler neglected to charge him with the amount in that month, and consequently the balance which Major Maynadier reports to have been on hand in safe March 31, 1876, ($4,081.11,) is $147.35 short of the required amount. This $147.35 at least must have been taken before, else in counting his money at the end of the month Major Maynadier would have found that amount in excess.

Had Major Maynadier been charged with this $147.35 in March, his balance would have been $4,228.46, the true amount of currency for which he was responsible at the close of the month. Nor is it impossible that a greater amount had been stolen before the end of the month. It appears from the statement of Major Maynadier that in verifying the amount of cash in his safe he did not always count, and perhaps did not on this occasion count, the money in each and every package. He generally counted only the loose money and broken packages in his till, and estimated the original packages by the figures marked on their wrappers. These packages had been carefully counted when deposited in the safe, and had not been disturbed thereafter by him. Chandler, being aware of this, and having secret access to the safe, could and possibly did, in the latter part of March, abstract some small sums from these original packages. If he did so, and if Major Maynadier had actually counted all the money in his safe, the original packages as well as the loose money, finding his money deficient, he would have been thrown upon his guard, &c.

Mr. WHEELER. Does that statement fully answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BRAGG. That is what I wanted to have read or intended to read myself in connection with this matter.

Mr. WHEELER. The statement of the board, found on page 4 of the report, shows that this $147.35 was a separate amount placed in his charge, being effects of a deceased soldier. It appears from the statement of the board that it was not entered in the accounts. This omission to take up the $147.35 on the account was a negligence on the part of the clerk, which Major Maynadier might have discovered and corrected. I do not mean to say that he took every precaution which was possible to be taken; that is not the question to be investigated or decided.

Our inquiry, to use the language of the Court of Claims, is this: Did Major Maynadier use that "degree of care and diligence which a careful, prudent man would require of his agent in a matter of private interest, or exercise in his own affairs." Again, was it neglect of duty to omit counting every week the contents of the original packages of money?

I will read in this connection from the statement of Major Maynadier, which shows the dates when the money was counted:

In my weekly statement for the 5th day of February, 1876, I had on hand in my safe $145.27, the balance required by my account. On February 9 I received from Major Roche, paymaster, $35,000, currency, and after verifying original packages deposited the money in my safe. I remained at my station throughout the month of February, and on the last day of the month my balance on hand was found correct, the original packages (already counted by me) being taken at their marked value, which is the usual method of balancing cash in banks, business houses, and by all disbursing officers.

I started out on a paying tour the 2d day of March, and returned the 25th day of same month. My accounts then balanced correctly. I balanced my accounts and rendered weekly statements, as follows: February 5, 12, 19, and 26, March 4, 11, 18, and 25, copies herewith, and found my cash correct.

I am not able to state that money had not been abstracted by Chandler previous to March 31, for the reason that my calculations were always based on the proper contents of original packages, which original packages were always carefully counted by me before being deposited in my safe. On my tour from 2d to 25th March, I took from the safe the money required in original packages and found them to be correct.

I beg the House to bear in mind that the law requires a paymaster to have a clerk.

It is the custom among paymasters, as will be admitted by gentlemen who have served in that capacity, or who are familiar with the duties of a paymaster, for them to confide in the clerk full trust and confidence. He frequently finds its necessary to intrust him with much of the management of his office and business, and it is possible for a paymaster's clerk, by reason of these opportunities and the confidence necessarily imposed, to embezzle for quite a period without detection. And therefore we are involved in the question as to whether Major Maynadier used proper care in his selection of a clerk. The papers in this case show that when this gentleman was appointed paymaster he applied to the Paymaster-General to nominate a clerk for him. The Paymaster-General replied he did not know of a suitable person. He then applied to two disbursing officers, and upon their recommendations he appointed Chandler, who had been a paymaster's clerk for some two years preceding. Major Maynadier would have been justified by custom if he had intrusted his office and its business to his clerk to a much greater extent than it appears was done by the petitioner in this case. It seems to me that he showed extraordinary care. Instead of intrusting the care of the money to his clerk, he invariably retained the combination of his safe himself, and invariably went to the safe in person when necessary to have access to it. It seems that he invariably opened the safe and took out or put in the money himself, imparting the combination of the lock to no one. All the evidence shows that on no single occasion did he allow his clerk, Chandler, to go to the safe and take a dollar out of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we should hold that a paymaster was to be liable because money was stolen from a safe which he kept locked up, keeping the combination himself, then on the same principle would not bank officers be responsible when subordinate employés by learning the combination of their locks commit robberies?

I have but one desire, and the committee of which I am a member have but one desire, and that is to see this case decided fairly by a proper application of law to the facts presented, and we ask the House to give the subject a judicial decision. I ask for a decision which may be regarded as a precedent in other cases which may come before this body. To aid us in this I beg your kind patience while attention is called to adjudications which have been had in the Court of Claims in cases very similar to this. This may enable us by comparison to see whether in view of all the facts Major Maynadier performed his official duties so as to justify us in giving him the relief which is asked for in the bill.

I ask that the Clerk will read the parts I have marked on pages 501, 502, 506, and 511 of the book I send to the desk.

Mr. BRAGG. That is the Glenn case?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir; the Glenn case. I ask to have the parts I have marked read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read from 4 Court of Claims Reports, as follows:

GLENN VS. UNITED STATES.

Claimant, a paymaster in the service of the United States, is ordered to Fort Boise, Idaho Territory, to pay troops. On arriving there his treasure-box, containing his Government funds, is stolen by soldiers at the garrison. He recovers a portion of the funds stolen, and for the remainder, including the amount of a reward offered for the detection of the thieves, he seeks a decree for a credit at the Treasury, under the act of May 9, 1866, (14 Stat. L., 44.)

Cases arising under act May 9, 1866, (14 Stat. L., 44,) must be examined by the light of surrounding circumstances. What should be exacted from a disbursing officer as prudential depends upon his situation, necessities, and condition. What might excuse the conduct of a party at one time or place would not under another state of facts. What caution and wariness might require sometimes would not be necessary at others. Money judiciously paid by a paymaster as a reward for the recovery of Government funds stolen from him without fault on his part should not fall on him. The act May 9, 1866, (14 Stat. L., p. 44,) is prospective in its operation, and gives jurisdiction to the Court of Claims in cases which might occur as well as in cases which had occurred at the time of its passage. (Page 501.)

To require that disbursing officers shall be gifted with prescience, or endowed with power to use superhuman efforts, so as always to avoid or prevent losses, would be to exact from mortals the exalted excellencies of superior beings. (Page 506.)

Under the proofs and circumstance exhibited by this record, we think the claimant should have a decree, entitling him to a credit with the proper accounting officers of the Treasury in the settlement of his accounts for the sum of $25,456.80, and it is so ordered. (Page 511.)

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would ask to have the head-note of another case read which I have marked on page 452 of the fifth volume of the Court of Claims Reports.

The Clerk read as follows:

WHITTELSEY VS. UNITED STATES.

In November, 1864, an assistant quartermaster requiring money in the performance of his duty goes to a commissary serving in the same department and procured $5,000, the amount of a draft in his possession. He places the money in the breast of his military coat, and proceeds to his own quarters. Before arriving there he discovers that the money is gone and returns on his track, but without success. He immediately notifies the proper military officers of the loss, and a search is instituted, but the money not found. The commanding general orders a board of officers to hear and report on the case. The evidence establishes a high character for the claimant as to his integrity and habitual care in the performance of his duties, and establishes the loss as utterly free from suspicious circumstances.

Where a disbursing officer carries money in the way such officers generally carry it on similar occasions, and the money is lost, but lost amid circumstances utterly free from suspicion, and is accompanied by the most diligent efforts to recover it, the disbursing officer will be entitled to a decree relieving him from responsibility under act 9 May, 1866, (14 Stat. L., page 44.)

A decree that he be credited with the $5,000 lost is ordered to be made. (Page 455.)

Mr. WHEELER. Now I will ask to have the head-note read in the case of Malone vs. United States, fifth Court of Claims Reports, 486.

The Clerk read as follows:

An assistant paymaster draws a sum of money from the Treasury to pay his troops. He takes it to his room intending to make necessary arrangements for its disbursement, intending on the following morning to proceed to the place where payment is to be made. After taking due precaution for its safety he retires and during the night the money is taken from his room by burglars. He immediately notifies the police authorities, also the Treasury Department and the Paymaster-General. The parties who committed the robbery are discovered, but only a small portion of the money is obtained, and the burglars, although arrested and confessing the crime, are never brought to justice. The money is charged to the claimant on the settlement of his accounts, and he brings this suit, under the act 9th of May, 1866, (14 Stat. L., page 44,) to obtain a decree directing the sum to be placed to his credit.

* * * * * * *

The degree of care and diligence which the act requires is that which a prudent man would exact of his agent in a like manner,

Mr. WHEELER. Now, I will ask to have the head-note read in the case of Christian, reported in volume 7, page 431.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHRISTIAN VS. UNITED STATES—ON THE PROOFS.

A commissary during the war receives moneys. Having no safe or secure place of deposit and being ordered to another post, he places the moneys in a package, which he deposits in the safe of certain merchants in Lawrence, one of whom is his bondsman, and has knowledge of the contents of the package. Their warehouse is plundered in the Quantrell massacre, the package lost, and the partner cognizant of its contents killed. No other person has knowledge of the contents, and the commissary offers himself as witness to prove that the package contained the moneys received by him officially from the sale of captured property.

* * * * * * *

II. In a suit for relief from responsibility on account of losses by capture under the disbursing officers' act, (14 Stat. L., 44,) circumstantial evidence, it being all that the circumstances of the case admit of, supported by evidence of the officer's good character, is sufficient to establish the amount of the funds otherwise shown to have been captured.

Mr. WHEELER. The court granted the relief asked, but we find that Judge Milligan dissented, using these words, page 436:

I am unable to concur in this opinion, because I do not think the claimant brings himself within the provisions of the statute.

Mr. Chairman, I will now ask to have the last case read reported in the Court of Claims Reports, volume 15, page 314.

The Clerk read as follows:

REYNOLDS VS. THE UNITED STATES—ON THE PROOFS.

An Army paymaster is robbed of a large amount of money. The Paymaster-General reports that the loss was without fault on the part of the officer. The Secretary of War approves the report, and a credit of $5,000 is allowed under the act 23d June, 1870. The officer's bondsmen pay the balance. Congress pass a private act authorizing this court to adjudge the case upon its merits, and to render judgment for the amount paid by the bondsmen.

I. Where a statute conferring jurisdiction of a case provides that the "claimants and the United States shall have the right to use as competent evidence" certain records and official reports, it relaxes and enlarges the ordinary rules of evidence, and opens the door for reports, letters, certificates, testimonials of character, &c., which would not otherwise be admissible.

* * * * * * * *

III. Where a disbursing officer is robbed in a public place, a bank, and the robbery is characterized by the suddenness, boldness, and adroitness of a practiced hand, and is accomplished by some artifice against which reasonable prudence could not guard and which human sagacity could not foresee, it is just and equitable that the officer and his sureties be not held accountable for the loss.

Mr. WHEELER. The opinion of the court, page 322, closes in these words:

In our opinion, it is just and equitable, under the circumstances, that the claimants should obtain the relief they ask; and it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that they have judgment as prayed for, as follows:

A. Wilhelm, surviving administrator de bonis non of Robert W. Coleman, deceased, for the sum of $5,587.18, and Amos Slaymaker, executor of the last will and testament of James L. Reynolds, deceased, for the like sum of $5,587.18.

I now cite a case where the court declined to give relief upon the merits of the case. I refer to Holman vs. The United States, volume 2, page 642. The court decided that—

When a paymaster sends a package of money to a Treasury depository in the same place, for safe-keeping, by an orderly who has been detailed for service in his office, and the package is stolen by or from the orderly before it is received by the depository and the loss is not discovered by the paymaster for some days, it cannot be held to have been without fault or negligence on the part of such officer.

I presume all of us would have fully concurred in this opinion.

Upon a question of jurisdiction of the Court of Claims in a case like this I find one decision from that tribunal touching this point. In Hall vs. United States, volume 9, page 273, the court lays down as one of the fundamental ideas of the act of May 9, 1866—

That the officer should have been, and should still be, held responsible for such "funds, vouchers, records, and papers."

The evidence shows (see report, page 5) that Major Maynadier refunded the money to the Government by direction of the Paymaster-General. Therefore it appears that the Court of Claims would not have jurisdiction to give relief to him under the act of May 9, 1866.

On page 274, the opinion of the court said:

The kind of loss contemplated by the act was doubtless the same as to all those enumerated articles. Each might be lost by capture, by robbery or theft, by fire or flood, or by unavoidable accident; and it seems to us that it was against such kinds of loss of specific things, for which he could have no other remedy, that the act was intended to afford relief; not against losses suffered by the officer through forgeries committed by his employés or others, for which he would in law be entitled to recourse against both the forger and the depositary who paid the forged checks.

It would therefore appear that they decided that court would not take jurisdiction in cases where the officer has other remedies. In the Hall case, volume 9, page 270, the case was disposed of on the following grounds. The court says, page 273:

The petition of the claimant fails to disclose a case for relief under the act. In the first place it does not allege that the money embezzled by the clerk was in the claimant's possession or charge.

And on page 274 we find these words:

But there is another view, which seems to us to leave the claimant without a title to relief. As before stated, an officer, to be entitled to that relief, must not only have been, but must still be, held responsible to the Government for that which he lost.

This paragraph conclusively decides that Major Maynadier could not have applied for relief to the Court of Claims.

I thought best, Mr. Chairman, to have the head-notes of the various decisions read in order that the committee might understand what rulings had been made by the Court of Claims upon the subject of relief to disbursing officers.

As the question has been asked me, I desire to say I know nothing personally about this case, and I will take this occasion to say that my colleagues on the Military Committee are men of too high character for any fear to arise that personal sympathies could influence them in the performance of public duties. I simply want, having first laid before this committee the rules which the Court of Claims have adopted in holding officers responsible, to now apply the facts in this case to those principles of law; and I ask this committee upon that application to act in a judicial manner and say whether they will relieve Major Maynadier or whether they will require the loss to fall upon himself.

In doing so I desire to make some allusion to remarks which I do not indorse or approve. It has been said that if officers of the Army do not like the rules imposed upon them by Congress they can resign and plenty of men can be found to take their places. I will admit that there are plenty of men who would be willing to accept their commissions, who would be willing to wear their uniforms, and who would be willing to draw their pay. But I deny that there are plenty of men who are capable of properly performing their duties in the same efficient manner they are performed by men whose lives have been devoted to the service of their country.

The Military Committee are no special champions of the Army; but they feel that our Government is too great to do injustice to any of its servants, yet at the same time they believe it is too just to allow laxity or negligence on the part of its servants to cause losses of public funds, and thus do injustice to the people. Fixed rules, based upon legal principles, should be established and adhered to, so that decisions of Congress would become adjudications, as binding and dignified as the opinions and decrees of the highest courts of our land.

I believe it is the duty of Congress regarding the Army to adopt such rules and regulations, to adopt such a system, as will retain in the Army and draw to the Army the highest and most efficient talent and the best integrity of our country. The principles of law having been laid down, we must proceed to apply those principles to all cases before this House and determine each case in a judicial manner.

With the permission of the House I will now briefly review the facts upon which the matter now before us must be decided.

Page 9 of the report shows that orders from the War Department authorized the paymaster at Prescott to keep public funds intrusted to him in his own possession; and page 5 shows that Major Maynadier, while on duty at this post, on or about April 2, 1876, had $4,017 stolen from the Government safe by his clerk, D. D. Chandler, who absconded.

When this case was before the House two weeks ago, some question was raised as to the proof regarding the theft. The fact that the money was stolen is substantiated by the written confession of Chandler, and affidavits reciting his verbal admission of the circumstances. I will recite extracts from these documents. His confession closes as follows, (see report, page 6:)

I will here frankly confess that the combination lock on said safe I considered insecure and worthless, and that I was, without knowing any single number of the combination of the lock, able at almost any time to open said safe, and that at different times I did open said safe and abstract therefrom money for my own use for which you were responsible.

The amount abstracted at various times I am unable to state, but am satisfied that all shortages on your accounts were through my means.

I am, sir, truly yours,

D. D. CHANDLER.

The affidavit of the clerk United States district court is as follows, (see report, page 6:)

UNITED STATES CLERK'S OFFICE,
Prescott, Arizona Territory, May 25, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I hereby state that David D. Chandler, former clerk in the Pay Department United States Army, did, on the 22d day of April, 1876, acknowledge in my presence that he, the said David D. Chandler, did, on or about the 1st day of April, 1876, steal or embezzle the sum of $4,017, United States currency, funds belonging to the United States of America. And I further state that the said David D. Chandler did then and there acknowledge in my presence and pay over to Major William M. Maynadier aforesaid the sum of $290, United States currency, being (as he, the said David D. Chandler, then and there acknowledged) of the funds stolen or embezzled as aforesaid.

And I further state that the said David D. Chandler did then and there, in my presence and hearing, express the hope that he should soon be able to pay over to the said William M. Maynadier the balance of the funds stolen or embezzled by him—amounting to $3,727—stating that he hoped and expected to receive funds from some friends residing in the East, for that purpose.

Very respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM WILKERSON,
Clerk United States District Court, Third Judicial District, Arizona Territory.

Major WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER,
Paymaster, United States Army, Fort Whipple, Arizona Territory.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 26th day of May, 1876.
[SEAL.] W. F. HIGGINS, Notary Public.

Extract from affidavit of Murat Masterson reads as follows, (report page 11:)

He (Chandler) came to my office and met Major Maynadier at the same time, and that they had a long conversation together in my presence; that in the conversation he proposed to write to his sister and obtain the amount of money from her, and make good the amount he had stolen from Major Maynadier. * * * He acknowledged that he had taken from Major Maynadier the sum of four thousand and seventeen dollars, and that he had given to Major Maynadier two hundred and ninety dollars and that the balance now due Major Maynadier from him was the sum of thirty-seven hundred and twenty-seven dollars, which was the amount he expected to get from his sister.

WILLIAM WILKERSON,
Clerk United States District Court, Third Judicial District, Arizona.

The affidavit of the United States attorney closes as follows, (report, page 10:)

Now, a word as to the criminality of Chandler: there is not the slightest doubt in my mind as to his guilt, and you will admit that my opportunity for knowing is as good as well could be, since I examined the proofs with a view to conducting the proceedings against him on the part of the prosecution.

I saw the written confession made by Chandler, and heard a statement from his own lips, which convinced me beyond a doubt that he committed the offense for which he was in confinement. Aside from this, he informed me that it was his intention to plead guilty to the charge against him on his arraignment before the court.

Chandler was in confinement from the time he was captured until his escape, and I say again that his escape was due solely and only to the criminal negligence of the deputy marshal.

I desire to say further that, from what I know of the facts of the case, the robbery was through no carelessness or want of care on your part.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EVERETT B. POMEROY,
United States Attorney, Arizona.

Paymaster WM. M. MAYNADIER, U. S. A.,
Fort Whipple, A. T.

Extracts from the affidavit of deputy marshal read as follows, (pages 6 and 7:)

Chandler admitted to me that he did not have access to the money-vault of the safe of Major Maynadier by right or consent of said Maynadier, but by fraudulently obtaining the combination, by which means he obtained the money; told me he had lost a good deal gambling.

* * * * * * *

Chandler told me that he was to give Major Maynadier a statement. That he (Chandler) had sisters who were wealthy, and they would make up all the money which he was delinquent, and requested paper to write them, and did so.

F. D. PARKER,
Late U. S. Deputy Marshal, Third District of Arizona.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of May, 1876.
WILLIAM WILKERSON,
Clerk U. S. District Court, Third Judicial District, Arizona.

The circumstances connected with the theft are shown by the affidavit of G. A. Ochus, a telegraph operator, (record, page 7;) the statement of Major Maynadier, (record, page 8,) and the affidavits, extracts from which we have recited.

These papers appear to have been the basis of the report of a board convened by the department commander. The board reports (page 4) that—

He (Chandler) further states that access to the safe was gained by fraud, and that owing to faults in the lock he was able at any time to enter the safe, and this without knowing a single combination of the lock. The board is of the opinion that this statement is untrue. It believes the safe to be a secure one, and that Chandler must have discovered the combination of the lock, either by secretly watching Major Maynadier when he opened it, or by actual experiment when he was out of the office. In evidence of this it transpired after the robbery that the telegraph operator, whose office was adjacent to Major Maynadier's, had heard noises late at night in the paymaster's office as of a person working at the safe. Chandler had been allowed to sleep in the office with the express purpose of keeping watch over the safe. On several occasions, when the telegraph operator heard these noises at suspicious hours of the night, he had called at the pay office and found Chandler there quietly reading; Chandler's explanation of the noises was that his dog, which was with him, had been jumping about. It also transpired that Chandler had been reading on the subject of "safe locks" and accounts of burglaries.

The question before us now is, did Major Maynadier use the care and vigilance which will justify Congress in relieving him from the loss? The board states, page 5:

Chandler had been highly recommended by two experienced paymasters in whose employ he had been, and during the year that he served with Major Maynadier he was considered honest and capable.

A letter from S. E. Sickles (page 11) says:

It is now more than ten years since my brother left us, and until a short period before that time he had our entire confidence and the management of my husband's business.

Unknown to us he fell into habits of gambling, and before we were aware of it involved us to such an extent that we are still suffering from the effects, and will probably not be able to extricate ourselves for years.

Major Maynadier, it appears, was ignorant of Chandler's antecedents. His sworn statement (page 8) says:

When I received my appointment as paymaster I asked the Paymaster-General if he knew of a suitable clerk he could recommend to me, but he did not happen to know of any at the time. Colonel Cary, paymaster, United States Army, then informed me that he knew of an excellent man, David D. Chandler, who had been clerk for him for two or three years, and who was then serving as clerk to Major Bridgeman, paymaster, United States Army; that he could recommend him as being a good clerk and a reliable man. Upon such recommendation I employed Chandler as my clerk, although previously I had no knowledge whatever of the man. I always considered Chandler, while serving with me, to be a man of strict integrity and good moral habits, and an excellent clerk.

These facts, I respectfully submit, show that Major Maynadier was not to blame for employing Chandler as his clerk. It seems that Major Maynadier used proper precaution to prevent embezzlement.

His sworn statement (page 8) says:

I would respectfully state that the said David D. Chandler never had the combination of the safe-lock, and was never permitted by me to enter said safe.

The safe, when not being actually used by me, was kept constantly locked, and I frequently changed the combination to preclude the possibility of any person acquiring it by looking on while I was handling it.

The board also says, page 5:

The board find that Major Maynadier was on duty by proper authority as paymaster at Prescott, Arizona; that he was duly authorized and required to keep public money in a safe provided for the purpose, there being no depository available; that he did so keep public money, though not in excess of what the service at his station required.

* * * * * * *

Under instructions of the Paymaster-General, Major Maynadier has refunded the amount lost; but so far as the board can ascertain, it believes Major Maynadier exercised due care in the keeping of the public money intrusted to him, and therefore recommends that he be relieved from responsibility for the loss of the $3,726.50, and that this amount, increased by the $100 paid by Major Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler, making a total of $3,826.50, be restored to Major W. M. Maynadier, paymaster United States Army.

There being no further business before it, the board adjourned sine die.

RODNEY SMITH,
Major and Paymaster U. S. A., President.
C. A. REYNOLDS,
Major and Quartermaster U. S. A., Member.
JOHN SIMPSON,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster U. S. A., Recorder.

I submit to the committee that there is but one point where Major Maynadier could have exercised more care and diligence than is shown by the evidence. His affidavit says, page 8, that on the last day of February and on other dates up to March 25, he balanced his accounts, and says, page 8:

My balance on hand was found correct, the original packages (already counted by me) being taken at their marked value, which is the usual method of balancing cash in banks, business houses, and by all disbursing officers.

The board alludes to this, and suggests that this made it not impossible that a greater amount had been stolen before the end of the month, and the board also say, page 4, that Chandler—

Possibly did, in the latter part of March, abstract some small sums from these original packages. If he did so, and if Major Maynadier had actually counted all the money in his safe, the original packages as well as the loose money, finding his money deficient, he would have been thrown upon his guard, and might sooner have detected Chandler, and perhaps have prevented a part of the robbery. But the board attaches no blame to Major Maynadier for this, since he seems to have done all that common prudence and the custom among business men required.

I have now presented the law and the facts. If I have failed to mention any point or to put proper stress upon any point which should militate against the bill, I beg that this deficiency on my part will be supplied by some of the eminent gentlemen whose ability and learning very properly give them prominence in this most learned and honorable assemblage. I confess, however, with my limited experience in investigating such matters I cannot see but that Major Maynadier exhibited a great degree (certainly as great a degree) of diligence and care as is shown in any of the cases adjudicated favorably to the petitioners by the Court of Claims.

I respectfully request the gentlemen who oppose the report of the Military Committee to point out in what way Major Maynadier could have exercised more care and diligence, and I ask them to show to this House what care and diligence on his part would have prevented this dishonest clerk from committing the embezzlement? I ask this of these gentlemen because I hold their views in the highest esteem, and feel that their efforts to prevent the passage of any bill which takes money from the Treasury until after an exhaustive examination deserves the highest commendation from all good citizens, and entitles them to the gratitude of every member of the House. Unless some members perform such work, which all will admit is not a pleasant task, this House will some day find with mortification they have, through inadvertence or lack of care and diligence on their part, allowed bills of this character to become laws which were wanting in that merit which should justify us in giving them our support.

I believe that the true policy is to lay down rules admonishing every one in the public service that this House will not relieve disbursing officers for losses unless they have shown a commendable degree of diligence and care, but at the same time it would not be wise legislation, as said by the Court of Claims, volume 4, page 507:

To require that disbursing officers shall be gifted with prescience, or endowed with power to use superhuman efforts, so as to always avoid or prevent losses, would be to exact from mortals the exalted excellencies of superior beings.

Should we not rather admit the wise admonitions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which said in Goslee vs. Shute, 18 Howard, 466:

After a misfortune has happened, it is easy to see how it might have been avoided. * * * But this is not a fair mode of trying the case.

I have made no allusion to the fact that the records of Congress show that a great proportion of the cases where it has granted relief has been since May 9, 1866, and I have not referred to the principle of law which might apply, namely, that Congress having established a rule of action, it will be sufficiently governed by the rule of stare decisis not to allow officers to suffer who, relying upon the construction heretofore adopted, have kept their applications before Congress until they are barred by limitation from the Court of Claims.

I cannot discover in the facts before us anything to show that Major Maynadier did not take that usual care which all these cases I have had read show should be expected from officers before they can be relieved from losses which they have incurred. If Major Maynadier did take such care, then, it seems to me, we would be doing great injustice to him not to pass a bill for his relief. If, on the contrary, this House should feel that he did not take that same prudent care which people take in the management of their own private affairs, then, of course, the House will say that he should bear the brunt of this loss himself. The case is left entirely with us. We are the court of last resort. The main questions for us to determine, I submit, is this: Did Major Maynadier take proper care in selecting the clerk, and was it neglect of duty in failing to open and recount original packages of bank bills once every week, when he made weekly balances of his accounts?

The board of disbursing officers say that common prudence and custom among business men did not require this, and we all know that officers in charge of public funds, from the Treasurer of the United States down to subordinate officials, do not take such precautions. He certainly is not responsible for the safe which was furnished by the Government, and upon which there was a lock which proved to be insecure. He cannot be held responsible for that, because he was ordered by the Government to keep the money in that safe; the safe was furnished by the Government, and if the lock was insecure it was the fault of the Government, and not the fault of Major Maynadier.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will my colleague on the committee yield for a single question? I ask him to state whether it is not true that the safe and lock were regarded by the paymaster himself as sufficient, and that the only statement as to the insecurity of the safe is made by the man who stole the money.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to that very important point—that the report of the board and the statement of Major Maynadier himself show that the lock was one of the most approved combination locks furnished to Government officers, and the only statement, as the gentleman from Illinois has very apply suggested, to show that the lock was not perfect is the statement of this clerk who stole the money.

Does it not seem, that with these facts before us, to hold Major Maynadier responsible for Chandler's defalcation would be departing very far from the uniform course which has characterized legislation in this body? Public officials have time and time again been relieved of losses caused by the dishonesty or even carelessness of their deputies, clerks, or other employés.

I have endeavored with my humble ability to state the law and facts, and the question is now left to your determination. If this bill is defeated, then what character of case can have your favorable consideration? If no relief is to be granted by Congress to disbursing officers, postmasters, and other officials, it may be well. It will save a vast drain upon the Treasury, and the hardships suffered by a few individuals may, I hope, be more than compensated by the good which will accrue to the public service. I leave the case with the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, there are, in my judgment, several good reasons why this bill ought not to pass. In presenting those reasons to this committee I expect of course to meet opposition from gentlemen who entertain on principle different views from mine. I expect to meet opposition from the friends of two other bills on this Calendar which seek to relieve paymasters—cases in which it is alleged the circumstances are something like those existing in the present case.

This bill has once before been considered by this Committee of the Whole and rejected. The action of the committee was reconsidered by the House upon one ground, and one ground only. The bill was rejected by the Committee of the Whole upon the ground that at the time this claim arose the Court of Claims had jurisdiction of the case, and this paymaster could have filed his petition in that court—could thereby have had a judicial investigation of the facts of the case and a judgment entitling him to be credited with this amount of money. My colleague on the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. WHEELER,] in pressing then upon this House the view that the Court of Claims had no jurisdiction, and therefore the Committee of the Whole had erred, said:

Since this bill was considered by the Committee of the Whole I have as carefully as the limited time would allow examined the reports, and cannot find a single case like this which has been adjudicated by the Court of Claims, and I ask the gentlemen who have opposed this bill to cite me to one case where the Court of Claims has assumed jurisdiction in a case of this character. The decision cited by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was a case which I contend sustains my view. I refer to the United States vs. Clarke, 4 Otto, 73. The cause of action arose from loss of money by robbery in time of war. It occurred April 6, 1865, in Texas. This was before the surrender of General Lee's army. But even in this case the question of jurisdiction was not raised.

All other causes which now occur to me where the Court of Claims has been called upon to relieve officers from losses of money are cases where the cause of action arose during the war. The very words of the statute, "by capture or otherwise," show that it is intended to only include cases where money has been lost by capture in war or by destruction similar to capture, such as being burned or a destruction or loss some way connected with the incidents of war.

To sustain that construction of the statute, a construction with which every lawyer is familiar, I will read from an authority which I have before me:

"Where general words follow an enumeration or words of a particular and specific meaning, such general words are to be held as applying only to persons or things of the same kind as those designated by the particular words."

That being the rule of construction, which no lawyer will deny, where a statute uses the language "by capture or otherwise," particularly when that statute is passed just after a war, it cannot mean losses incurred by the theft of money by a clerk in time of peace.

In support of this view I have had read at the Clerk's desk a paper showing that Congress has universally accepted this rule of construction in dealing with cases of this kind.

That was the language of my distinguished colleague on the committee when he asked the House to reverse the action of the Committee of the Whole. He stated his position as a lawyer upon this floor, presented his authorities in support of it, and satisfied the House, so that it reversed the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Now, it is the height of military skill and discipline, and it is equally the height of good parliamentary leadership, to change front in the presence of the enemy without breaking line or losing position; and I can commend my distinguished colleague for the ability, shrewdness, and sagacity with which he has done this, for he comes here to-day and reads to this House a chain of cases, showing that the statute did give the Court of Claims jurisdiction, and that wherever the facts have warranted the finding, which is assumed to be the proper finding in this case, that court has rendered the relief claimed here. In other words, he has changed front. Having satisfied the House on a former day that the law did not confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims, he now proves that the Court of Claims had jurisdiction, and if the case had been submitted to it would have rendered judgment in favor of this claimant. And hence he argues Congress should grant the same relief to the claimant that he might have received had he prosecuted his claim under the law in the court. But he takes no note of the fact that the laches of the claimant to avail himself of the court is the grievance from which he is now suffering. The law provided him a forum. His neglect leaves him remediless.

I look over these seats in vain to see the face of the distinguished member from the Springfield district of Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] I should like to hear in this discussion his voice, always raised against special legislation. He stands here day after day (and the sentiment of the House seems to be with him) protesting against the disposition and adjudication of private claims in this House, and claiming that it is the duty of Congress to provide a court wherein such claims can be adjudicated. Whenever that sentiment is uttered upon this floor it meets a response from both sides of this Chamber as indicating the true and wise thing to be done in order to relieve Congress from the burden of private business that is being pressed upon it. With what force can such an argument as that be advanced by this body if we allow ourselves to entertain cases coming here in which the courts have had jurisdiction, where a judicial tribunal has been thrown open to a claimant and he has slept upon his rights, or by his neglect to present them in proper form or under proper circumstances has allowed the statute of limitations to operate, and then comes here asking us to proceed as if it were a question de novo?

Mr. HENDERSON. Will my friend allow me to make a single suggestion?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to suggest to my friend that in the cases of these two paymasters, supposing themselves at the time of the loss to be responsible, they immediately paid the money over to the Government to make their accounts good; and the effect of the decisions read by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is to show that after the payment of the money into the Treasury they had no remedy before the Court of Claims. It will be remembered that when this statute was first referred to I suggested to my colleague on the committee, and also to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] that the statute did not apply to these cases, because these officers had paid the money into the Treasury and thereby lost their right to proceed in the Court of Claims.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HENDERSON,] the chairman of my committee, was not the subject of my remarks in discussing the legal status of this case. I was addressing myself to the view presented by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, and commending him for the skill with which he shifted front this morning and went gallantly into the fight just as if he had not committed himself to the counter proposition on the former discussion of the case.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman will permit me to state this——

Mr. BRAGG. As soon as I finish with the gentleman from Illinois I shall be exceedingly glad to hear my friend from Alabama, for I admire the skill with which he will present himself in a new phase.

The Supreme Court have decided, where a man has no claim against the Government, of course the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction to grant relief. So would any court, I fancy. They have decided also that the statute of limitations commences to run from the time that the paymaster, or officer, shall have demanded from him by the Department an adjustment of a balance or account charged against him. They decided that in Hall's case.

Suppose the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois to be true, what does it amount to? No more nor less than this: Paymaster Maynadier having a good claim against the Government and having provided for him by Congress a competent tribunal to hear and determine that claim, upon his own considerations of the facts of his case became satisfied he had no legal evidence that would sustain him before the court, and to save him the expense of that litigation which would be profitless, settled his claim with the Government by declining to make any presentation of the loss to the Government. So that in that view of the case it would be no more nor less than a waver or laches on the part of the claimant to whom a court had been given for the consideration of his claim to prosecute that claim.

Ten years subsequent to the creation of the claim, and four years subsequent to the barring of the statute in the ordinary running of the statute, he comes to Congress and asks for special relief, when Congress had prior to that time given him and all others relief by affording them a tribunal to make their case and there receive their relief.

Now, that is an answer in one view to the view presented by my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the committee. Let me give him an answer in another view which is full and complete. The paymaster of the United States has at all times, or nearly so, moneys in his hands belonging to the Government of the United States which are public funds. He takes up on his account the sale of deceased soldiers' effects. He keeps an open account with the Government, and if he have a just claim against the Government he can at any time, upon the date of any settlement, upon the adjudication of any balance, interpose any counter-claim he has against the Government as an offset to any money which then remains in his hands. So that the payment of the money, while not making any claim to the Government at that time, does not bar this claimant from making a claim in settlement of any account he had with the Government. Because it appears from the papers in this case he never presented his case to the consideration of the Government.

There never has been any adjudication upon this claim which could bar it by any Department of the Government. But it has remained an inchoate claim on his part not presented and a good and valid counter-claim if it be supported by proof such as is entitled to be received and have weight in court to be presented as a counter-claim on any settlement which he may have heretofore or may hereafter make with the Government until there is an adjudication. The Government have not acted on it. The court have not acted on it. He has not presented it to any one of the tribunals which had jurisdiction to hear and determine it. So it presents itself to us here as appealing to us, notwithstanding we have furnished a good and sufficient tribunal to adjudicate the claim, to make a special case out of it upon ex parte testimony and act on it here to reimburse this officer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to this view entertained by the committee on the former consideration of this case, permit me to present another view. I maintain, sir, it is our duty to hold the rules upon the disbursing officers of this Government without any relaxation, that the relaxation of the rule of accountability breeds nothing else but supposed robberies, defalcations, and losses through the disbursing officers of the United States, and that no sooner has Congress enacted at any time a relaxation in the rule than there spring up like dragon's teeth on every side these claims. Here comes the Candee claim, which stands next on this Calendar. There was not a lisp of that claim, except to the claimant's brother, for ten whole years. And it never blossomed and came to the notice of Congress until Congress, in some inconsiderate bill, said they were willing under certain circumstances to relieve an officer. Then comes this claim which had slept quietly for ten years. Yes, this claim has slept for more than ten years.

Since a rule was adopted of relief to postmasters in all cases of robberies, in breaking open their safes, in stealing postage-stamps, what has been the effect? As I read every morning the reports which come from the committees of this House, I believe scarcely ever a package comes which has not one or more and sometimes four or five bills to relieve postmasters who had a safe blown open in some mysterious way and lost from one hundred to two thousand dollars' worth of postage-stamps, which have never been heard of afterward in the world.

I say that the relaxation of this rule of accountability eminently tends to breed that kind of robbery. It is not unknown to those who are familiar with the practice of law that men frequently find themselves gagged, blindfolded, and hands tied behind them while robberies are going on by their confederates. So in many of the States legislation has taken place requiring all kinds of pleadings to be verified even in cases in tort. It proves to be nothing at all but a promoter of perjury.

Why should this officer be relieved? Because, we are told, it is necessary to procure the very best talent possible in the Army, and the establishment of the highest degree of integrity; and none can be found so capable as those that are already performing that duty in the Army. That is the doctrine of my friend from Alabama. That may be very well, Mr. Chairman, if you should desire an officer to take command of a squadron of cavalry, or a section of artillery, or an engineer to lay out a fortification; but when you come to a question of plain, simple book-keeping, I would like to know where a man, because he is a major in the Army and draws as much again salary as a book-keeper in a bank, becomes such a distinguished book-keeper and gentleman of such wonderful integrity that we ought instantly, and in justice to him, relieve him of any accident which may happen in the disbursement of his funds, without question, and entirely at variance with the principle established in other cases.

The Pay Department of the Army is not a part of the combative force of the Army, though it receives brevets sometimes. There are many respectable and brave men among them, but it is eminently a non-combative portion of the Army, and the appointees are, I regret to say, largely made from civil life. To me it seems sometimes that it is made a receptacle for some broken-down politician, unable in some Congressman's district to be of any other service, and he is put into a position of that kind where he can draw his pay out of the public crib instead of drawing it from his friends in his own State, and ultimately be pensioned by a place on the retired list.

Now, it is stated, as another reason why we should relieve this officer, that the robbery took place by his clerk. Now, who appointed the clerk? If the Government appointed the clerk; if the Government said you must intrust the custody and care of these funds to A, B, C, or D, there would be some reason in this demand. If you place there a man without character, a man without honor or honesty, then in good faith you should make good to the party holding office all loss occasioned by the defalcation of such a clerk; but that is not the case in a paymaster's position. The paymaster selects his own clerk. He is his own confidential adviser. He is the only one that has access to his funds; and if we are to believe the declarations of this paymaster, that the man occupying that confidential relation to him was never permitted to go to his safe, or to know his combination, we must perforce conclude that he was looked upon, even by his superior, as a suspicious character, for, occupying that confidential position, it has been shown that his own chief would not intrust him with the combination of his safe, when he had to keep the accounts, to make the payments, to disburse the funds, and balance the books.
